The Man Who Made a College Bloom

Around the Hill

As is customary in our Autumn issue, the donor roll for the previous academic year is inserted at centerfold. The summaries on the opening pages make gratifying reading for all who have hopes and affection for Middlebury.

Some of the most encouraging statistics, however, appear only when this year's results are contrasted with 1966-67, the year before Annual Giving to Middlebury was inaugurated, following completion of the Ford Challenge capital campaign. First, compared with six years ago the percentage of our alumni making gifts to Annual Giving has exactly doubled—from 23% to 46%. (Actually, the record is even better than that: those percentages are of alumni solicited, not of all alumni "of record", and in 1966-67 only 61% of Middlebury's alumni of record were solicited, while last year the figure was 97%.) Other cheerful numbers: compared to that 1966-67 base, the dollar value of alumni support through Annual Giving has increased 228%, while the number of alumni donors has grown by 236%.

The whole, quite impressive record of growth in gift support of the College is summarized (table, page 6) in this issue's principal story. But a key datum in Middlebury's progress, 1963-'73, is the "$1.27" million appearing in the table on page 7. This is the 10-year total of alumni contributions to the day-to-day operation of their College and constitutes 60% of all sustaining funds donated to Annual Giving to Middlebury.

The Grave on the Golf Course

One of the first settlers in the wilderness along Otter Creek in the mid-1770s was William Douglass, then 40 years old and probably from western Connecticut. In 1777 when the British regained control of the Lake and their Indians began marauding and pillaging throughout the Valley, Douglass left his clearing and retreated south with the other settlers. But in the fall of 1783, with the War ended and Gen. Washington preparing to disband his armies, Douglass came back to his farm with two young sons, to prepare for the return of his wife and family in the following year.

Douglass's house probably stood somewhere along the third fairway of the College golf course.

"On the 19th of December of that year," Swift writes, "he went out into the forest to cut wood and was instantly killed by the fall of a tree." A monument was later erected at his grave "on the rising ground southerly from his house." When Douglass had retreated south six years earlier, he had buried in the woods a cache of such few valuables as he had, to save them from pillage; as his wife had not yet returned, he had not opened the cache in 1783, and the secret of its location died with him.

The grave site is on a now-thicketed knoll due south of the fourth tee. The broken headstone lies on the ground. Douglass's is one of the earliest deaths memorialized by a stone in the town and this summer his grave was visited by Horace Loomis '33, Judge Stuart Witherell, and Egbert Hadley '10. Loomis and Witherell, as local members of the Addison County Old Cemetery Association (Bill Allen '43, president), then arranged with the College for the Association to restore and erect the gravestone and fence the grave. The Association expects to complete the restoration by next spring.

Alumni College

When Ed Sommers '60, director of annual funds, offered alumni a sample kit for any of four Winter Term courses given last winter, the response surprised him. Nearly 600 alumni returned a course-kit request with their check to Annual Giving. The four courses and the number of their off-campus auditors were: College Law (43), Women (126), Plants (141), and Robert Frost (267). The heaviest response to all four came from members of the classes of '60 through '69. Next were members of the three classes in the '70s, followed by the '50s, '40s, '30s, and '20s, in order.

Staff Reassignments

Of the usual College-staff shuffles and new appointments announced this summer, three involve alumni. Roth ("Tee") Tall, Jr. '65 has moved from coordinator of student activities (Proctor Hall) to assistant director of development (Old Chapel). The new student activities administrator at Proctor Hall is Jacqueline Flickinger who had been Tee's assistant. Jackie has been joined, there, by Pat Whitney '69, who left her post as assistant director of admissions to become an assistant dean of students.

Meanwhile Barbara Weeks, who has been an associate in the Development Office, has been named assistant director of alumni relations in Gordie Perine's office. Bobbie, a Michigan alumna ('64), worked overseas in Geneva and then as an editorial researcher for the Reader's Digest before coming to Middlebury two years ago.

Barbara Weeks

Tee Tall '65 returned to campus in '68 as assistant director of alumni relations and placement, and became coordinator of student activities in 1970. His immediate duties in development will consist in aiding alumni and parents in their regional fund solicitations for the 175th Anniversary Fund. Tee is also president this year of the United Fund of Addison County.

The Middlebury College News Letter is published quarterly in Autumn, Winter, Spring, and Summer by Middlebury College. Editorial office is room 42, Old Chapel, Middlebury, Vermont 05753. Second-class postage paid at Middlebury, Vt.

The Middlebury College News Letter is mailed without charge to all alumni. A parents edition, without alumni news, is mailed without charge to all parents of students and recent graduates. Every alumnus is asked to inform the Alumni Office of his change of address and of any news concerning himself or another alumnus.

Reflecting on Middlebury's decade of fecund growth, we look back with

The Man Who Made a College Bloom

By The Editor

On November 8th, 1963 when James I. Armstrong was installed as Middlebury's twelfth president, John F. Kennedy was in the White House (with two weeks to live), Nikita Khrushchev was in the Kremlin, and Charles de Gaulle was in the Palais de l'Elysee. The preeminent spokesman for black-American aspirations was Martin Luther King, Jr.; Dwight Eisenhower was living in retirement at Gettysburg.

No man had yet set foot on the moon or lived on the beat of another man's heart; we had not heard of Medicare, Earth Day, Women's Lib, Watergate, or the US Postal Service. In South Vietnam, President Diem and his brother, Nhu, had been overthrown and killed on the previous weekend; two helicopter companies, our first overt fighting support, were about to embark in California. Here in the States, Mary McCarthy's The Group was a best-seller; the big movies were Cleopatra, Hud, 8½, and Tom Jones; hamburger was selling for 51¢ a pound, bacon for 68¢, coffee was 69¢, and grade-A large eggs were 55¢ a dozen.

In the next decade the nation would experience the Negro Revolution—with riots in Watts and Detroit, the Black Muslims, the Black Panthers, and grudging integration of the public schools; Americans would know the fright of four assassinations, a new awareness of environmental hazards and ecological frailty, scaled-up evidences of the terminal illness of its cities, and the revelations of the Pentagon Papers followed by a tortured further baring of political cynicism and corruption in her national leadership. All in all, an epochal ten years.

Meanwhile, Middlebury College was to know—on a smaller canvas but in a far happier sense—a decade equally historic. While not untouched by the whirlwinds sweeping the nation and particularly by those most directly affecting young people—the drug culture and related revolutions in student attitudes, tastes, and expectations—Middlebury has moved to far stronger positions in quality of faculty, student life, physical facilities, and in voluntary support.

At the end of the first ten years of the presidency at Simmons before returning to Middlebury in 1971 to work for Fred Neuberger in the Admissions Office.

In other staff news, George Wishart, who was purchasing agent at the College for the past eight years, has gone to a similar responsibility at the University of New Hampshire in Durham. Filling a new billet, assistant treasurer and budget director, is David Ginevan, who has been director of general services at Carnegie-Mellon University. David holds Master's degrees in Education and Business Administration from Pittsburgh.

College to Control Fraternity Houses

This summer the President wrote the student presidents of the six Middlebury fraternities, and their alumni presidents, advising that the College would begin discussions with the fraternities this fall concerning the College's assumption of control of fraternity facilities, including full responsibility for their maintenance and servicing. In the belief that students today value their membership in a fraternity principally for the small-group living and relative independence it affords, rather than traditional fraternal customs, the President wrote that he was asking the Dean of the College to explore with representatives of the six fraternities "new possibilities and arrangements for small group living and eating in the context of the present facilities."

The Board of Trustees at its May meeting had authorized the administration to negotiate the transfer of ownership responsibilities to the College. The College also announced approval of board rebates for women fraternity members provided they are eligible for all fraternity privileges, adding that in any new living and dining arrangements which may be undertaken, "women will be as much a part as men."

A College position paper on fraternities was enclosed and was mailed also to all students scheduled to return to campus this fall.

The discussions referred to have been occurring since September and will be reported upon in the Winter issue of this magazine. Meanwhile those who are interested may write to the office of the Dean of the College for a copy of the Statement on Fraternities.

Recount

Correcting some mistaken figures that appeared in these columns (summer issue, p. 3) after our abacus blew a fuse, here are the true totals of trustees on the Middlebury Board: there are 23 in all, of which 19 are alumni. The Board consists of 13 Charter, four Term, and six (not three) Alumni Trustees. Of the eight Trustees-emeriti, seven are alumni of Middlebury College.

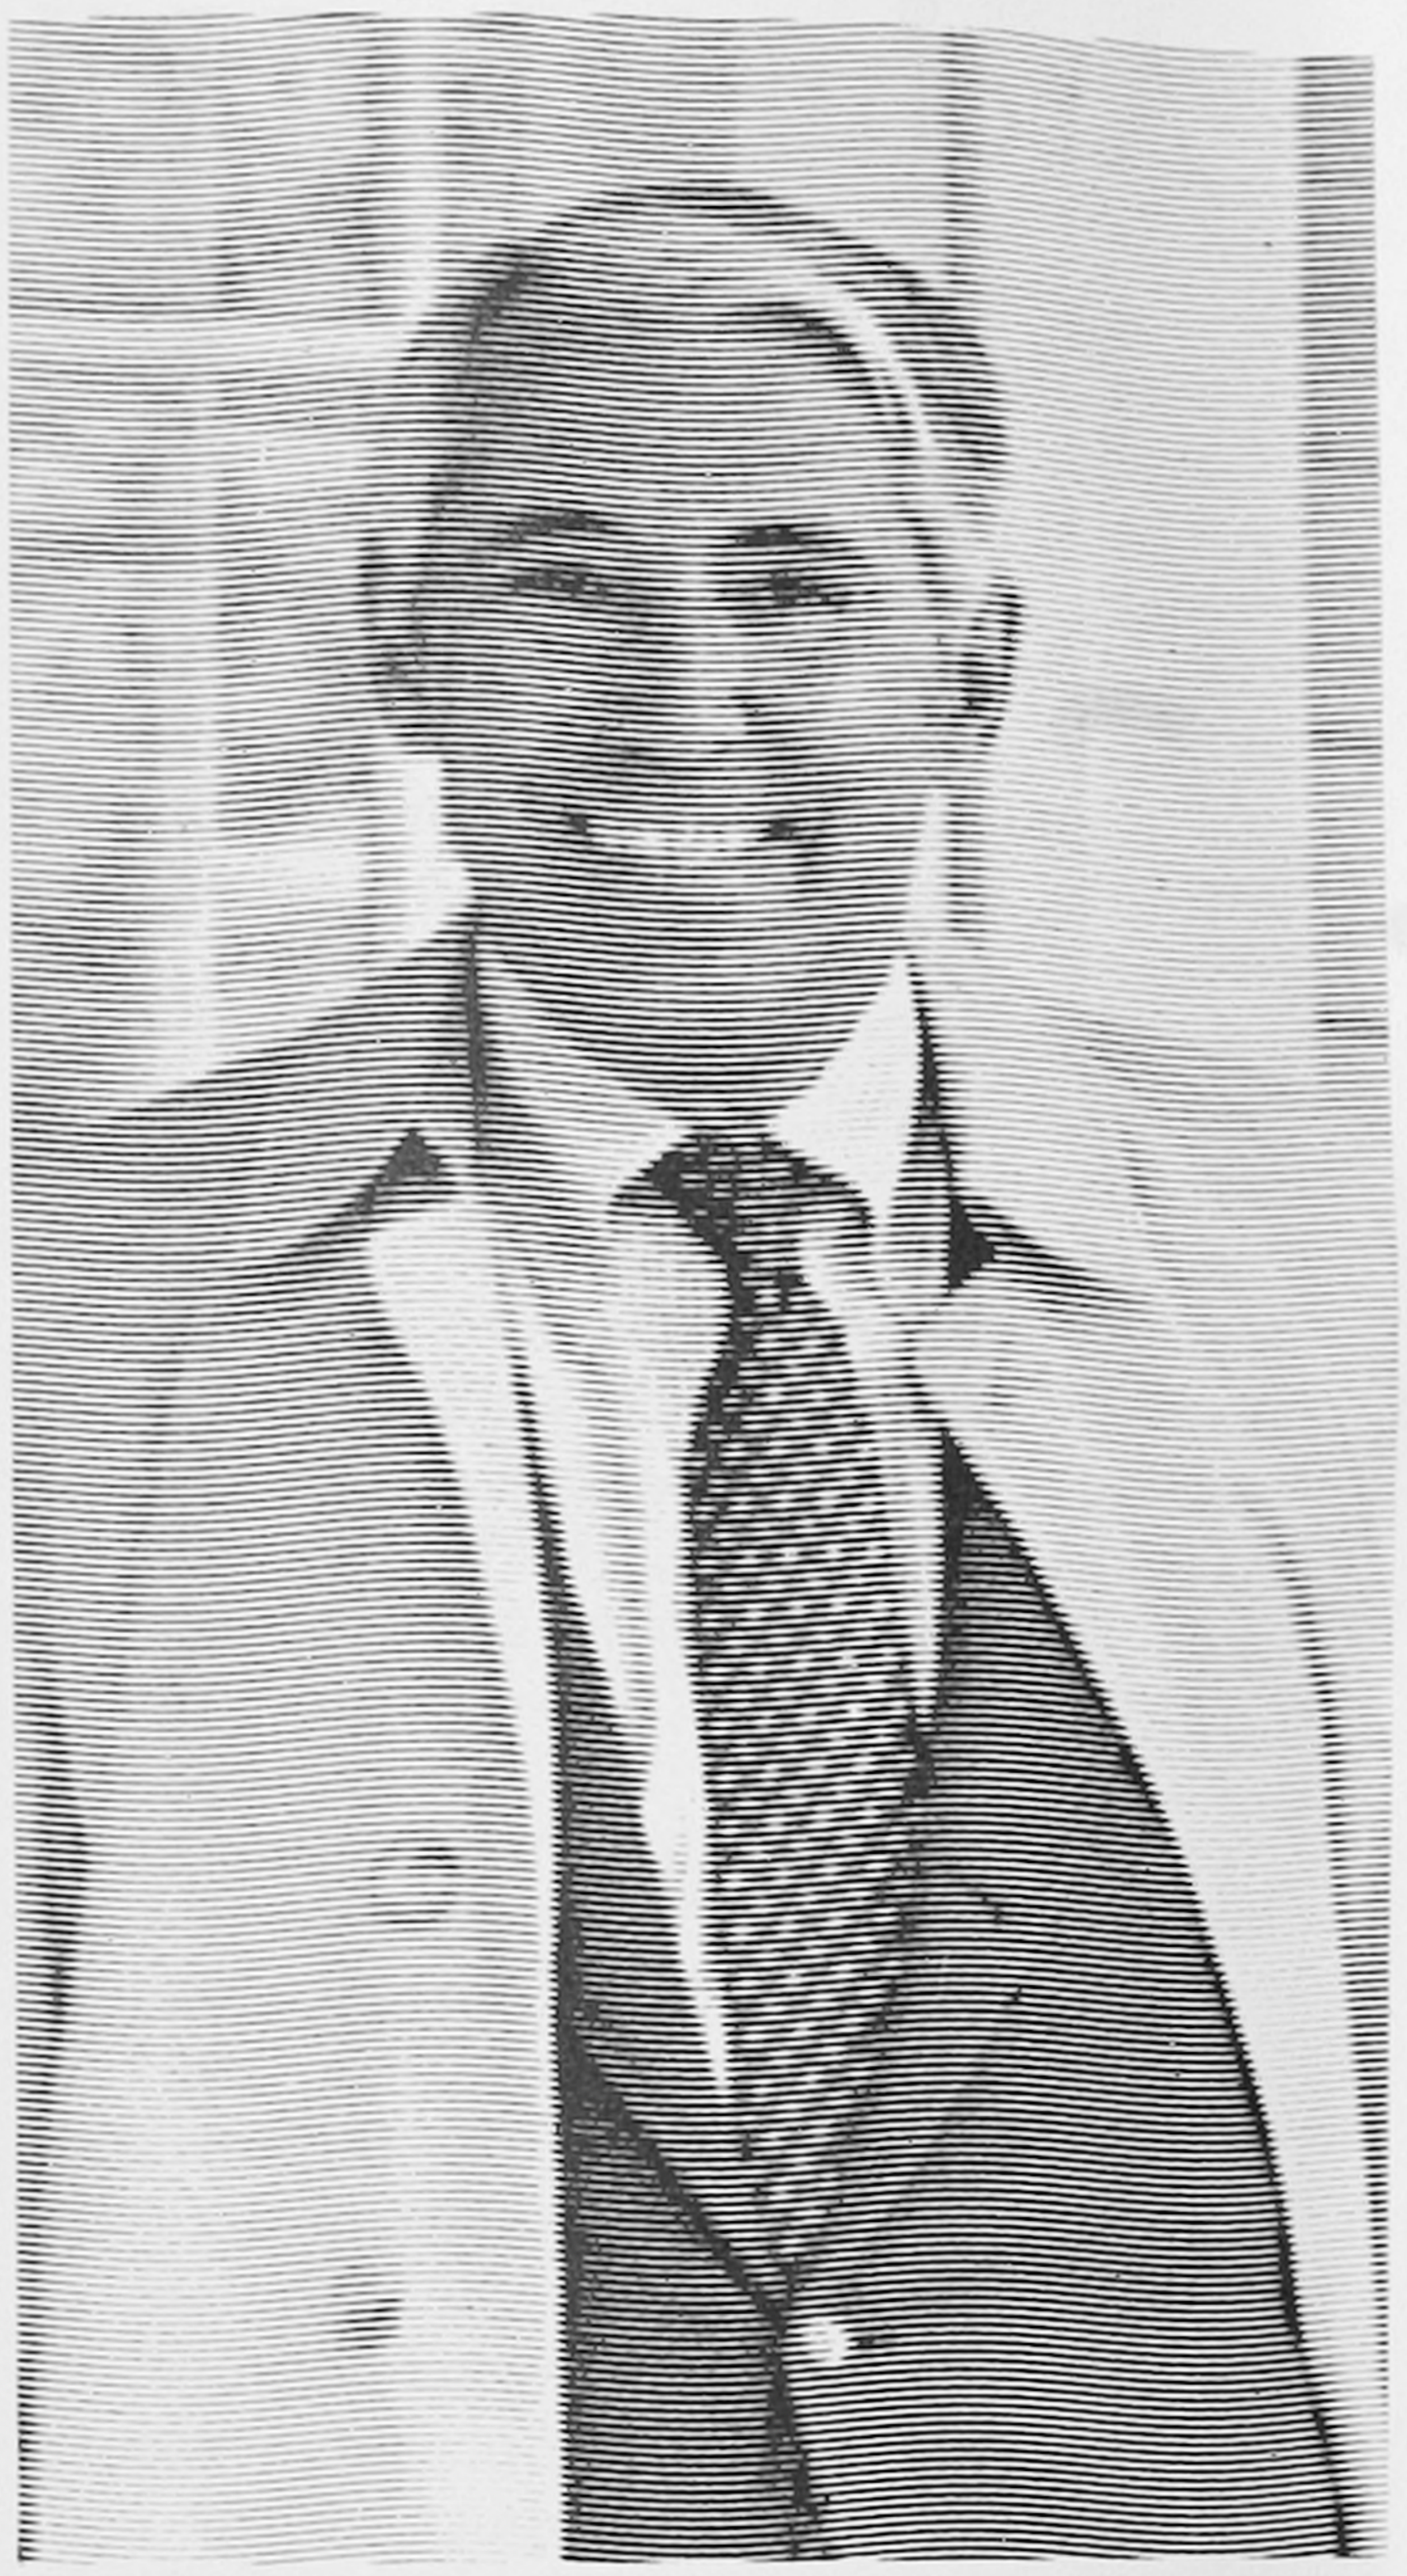
The Greening of the National Christmas Tree

Two alumnae sent us a story clipped from the Washington Post of August 14th which included the information that "the annual raising of the national Christmas tree (in Washington) began in 1923 when a giant fir cut in Vermont was presented by Middlebury College to President Calvin Coolidge" ("a Vermont native," adds the Post, succumbing to N.Y. Times Disease). The story reports that the following year "a live Norway spruce also from Vermont was presented to Coolidge and planted on Sherman Plaza, south of the White House." This tree was used in the annual Yuletide festivities until 1941, but since 1954 a taller tree cut from a national forest has been erected each fall on the Ellipse by the National Park Service. However, environmentalists raised such a fuss last year that the Service has now reverted to the 1924 practice and this October a live 40-foot Colorado blue spruce from Shickshinny, Pa. is being planted on the Ellipse and will be decorated each year for the District's annual Christmas Pageant of Peace.

We've been unable to establish any details of the College's involvement in that 1923 gift. Perhaps one of our senior alumni recalls the event and can enlighten us.

Postscript

History aficionados will be gratified to learn that two historical articles published in these pages were awarded a citation-for-excellence by the American Alumni Council, meeting in Vancouver in July. The stories were "The Hands—a distinguished family of American jurists", published last fall, and "The remarkable life of a 'poor hell-deserving sinner' ", the story of Lemuel Haynes which appeared this spring.



If the College's entire 173-year history were reduced to the scale of one working day (8:30-5:00), then John Martin Thomas took the helm from Ezra Brainerd at 2:00 p.m.; Paul Moody relieved Thomas at 2:38 and was himself relieved by Samuel Stratton at 3:37. Stratton worked the College past the shoals of World War II and continued in the wheelhouse until 4:32, when he retired ashore.

A first-mate from Old Nassau, Jim Armstrong, was then piped aboard and has driven the ship under full sail for the past 28 minutes.

Where has that fast run at the end of the first day taken us? What is our heading, and why? By what principles are we guided and what have the skipper and some of his senior crew observed in this exciting half-hour?

The report that follows seeks the answers.

THE COLLEGE PURSE

Four years ago in these pages we recounted Middlebury's checkered career through the 19th century, suggesting that a succession of misfortunes unnaturally stunted the institution's growth between 1836 and about 1900, and that the College was a "late bloomer" which had resumed normal growth only since World War I and had really burgeoned only since World War II (A Funny Thing Happened . . ., Autumn '69). We also noted that Middlebury's assets increased between 1920 and 1950 by $6 million (or 231%) and between 1950 and 1963 by another $19.4 million (or 226%) to about $28 million. All this was prologue.

What has happened in the past decade?

As soon as President Armstrong took the helm in the fall of 1963, he secured a $1.7 million challenge grant from the Ford Foundation and launched the College into a capital campaign that raised, by 1966, $8.3 million. Then in 1972, looking to its 175th anniversary in 1975, the College inaugurated the 175th Anniversary Fund. On June 30th of this year, 74% of the Fund's $10.5 million goal had been raised.

These fund raising efforts have added in the last ten years $20.3 million to Middlebury's resources, of which $13.2 million accrued to endowment or other capital funds, and $7.1 million to operating funds. (For details see Growth of Gift Support in past Decade.) of Dr. Armstrong, this review tries to assess the credits and debits, summarizing what has happened to and in the College and looking ahead to the growth opportunities remaining to her eighth quarter-century of life. We shall not only look at the statistics but shall listen to the views of some senior members of Faculty who have, themselves, participated in that decade, and to the views of the leader and principal agent of that growth, the President of the College, himself.

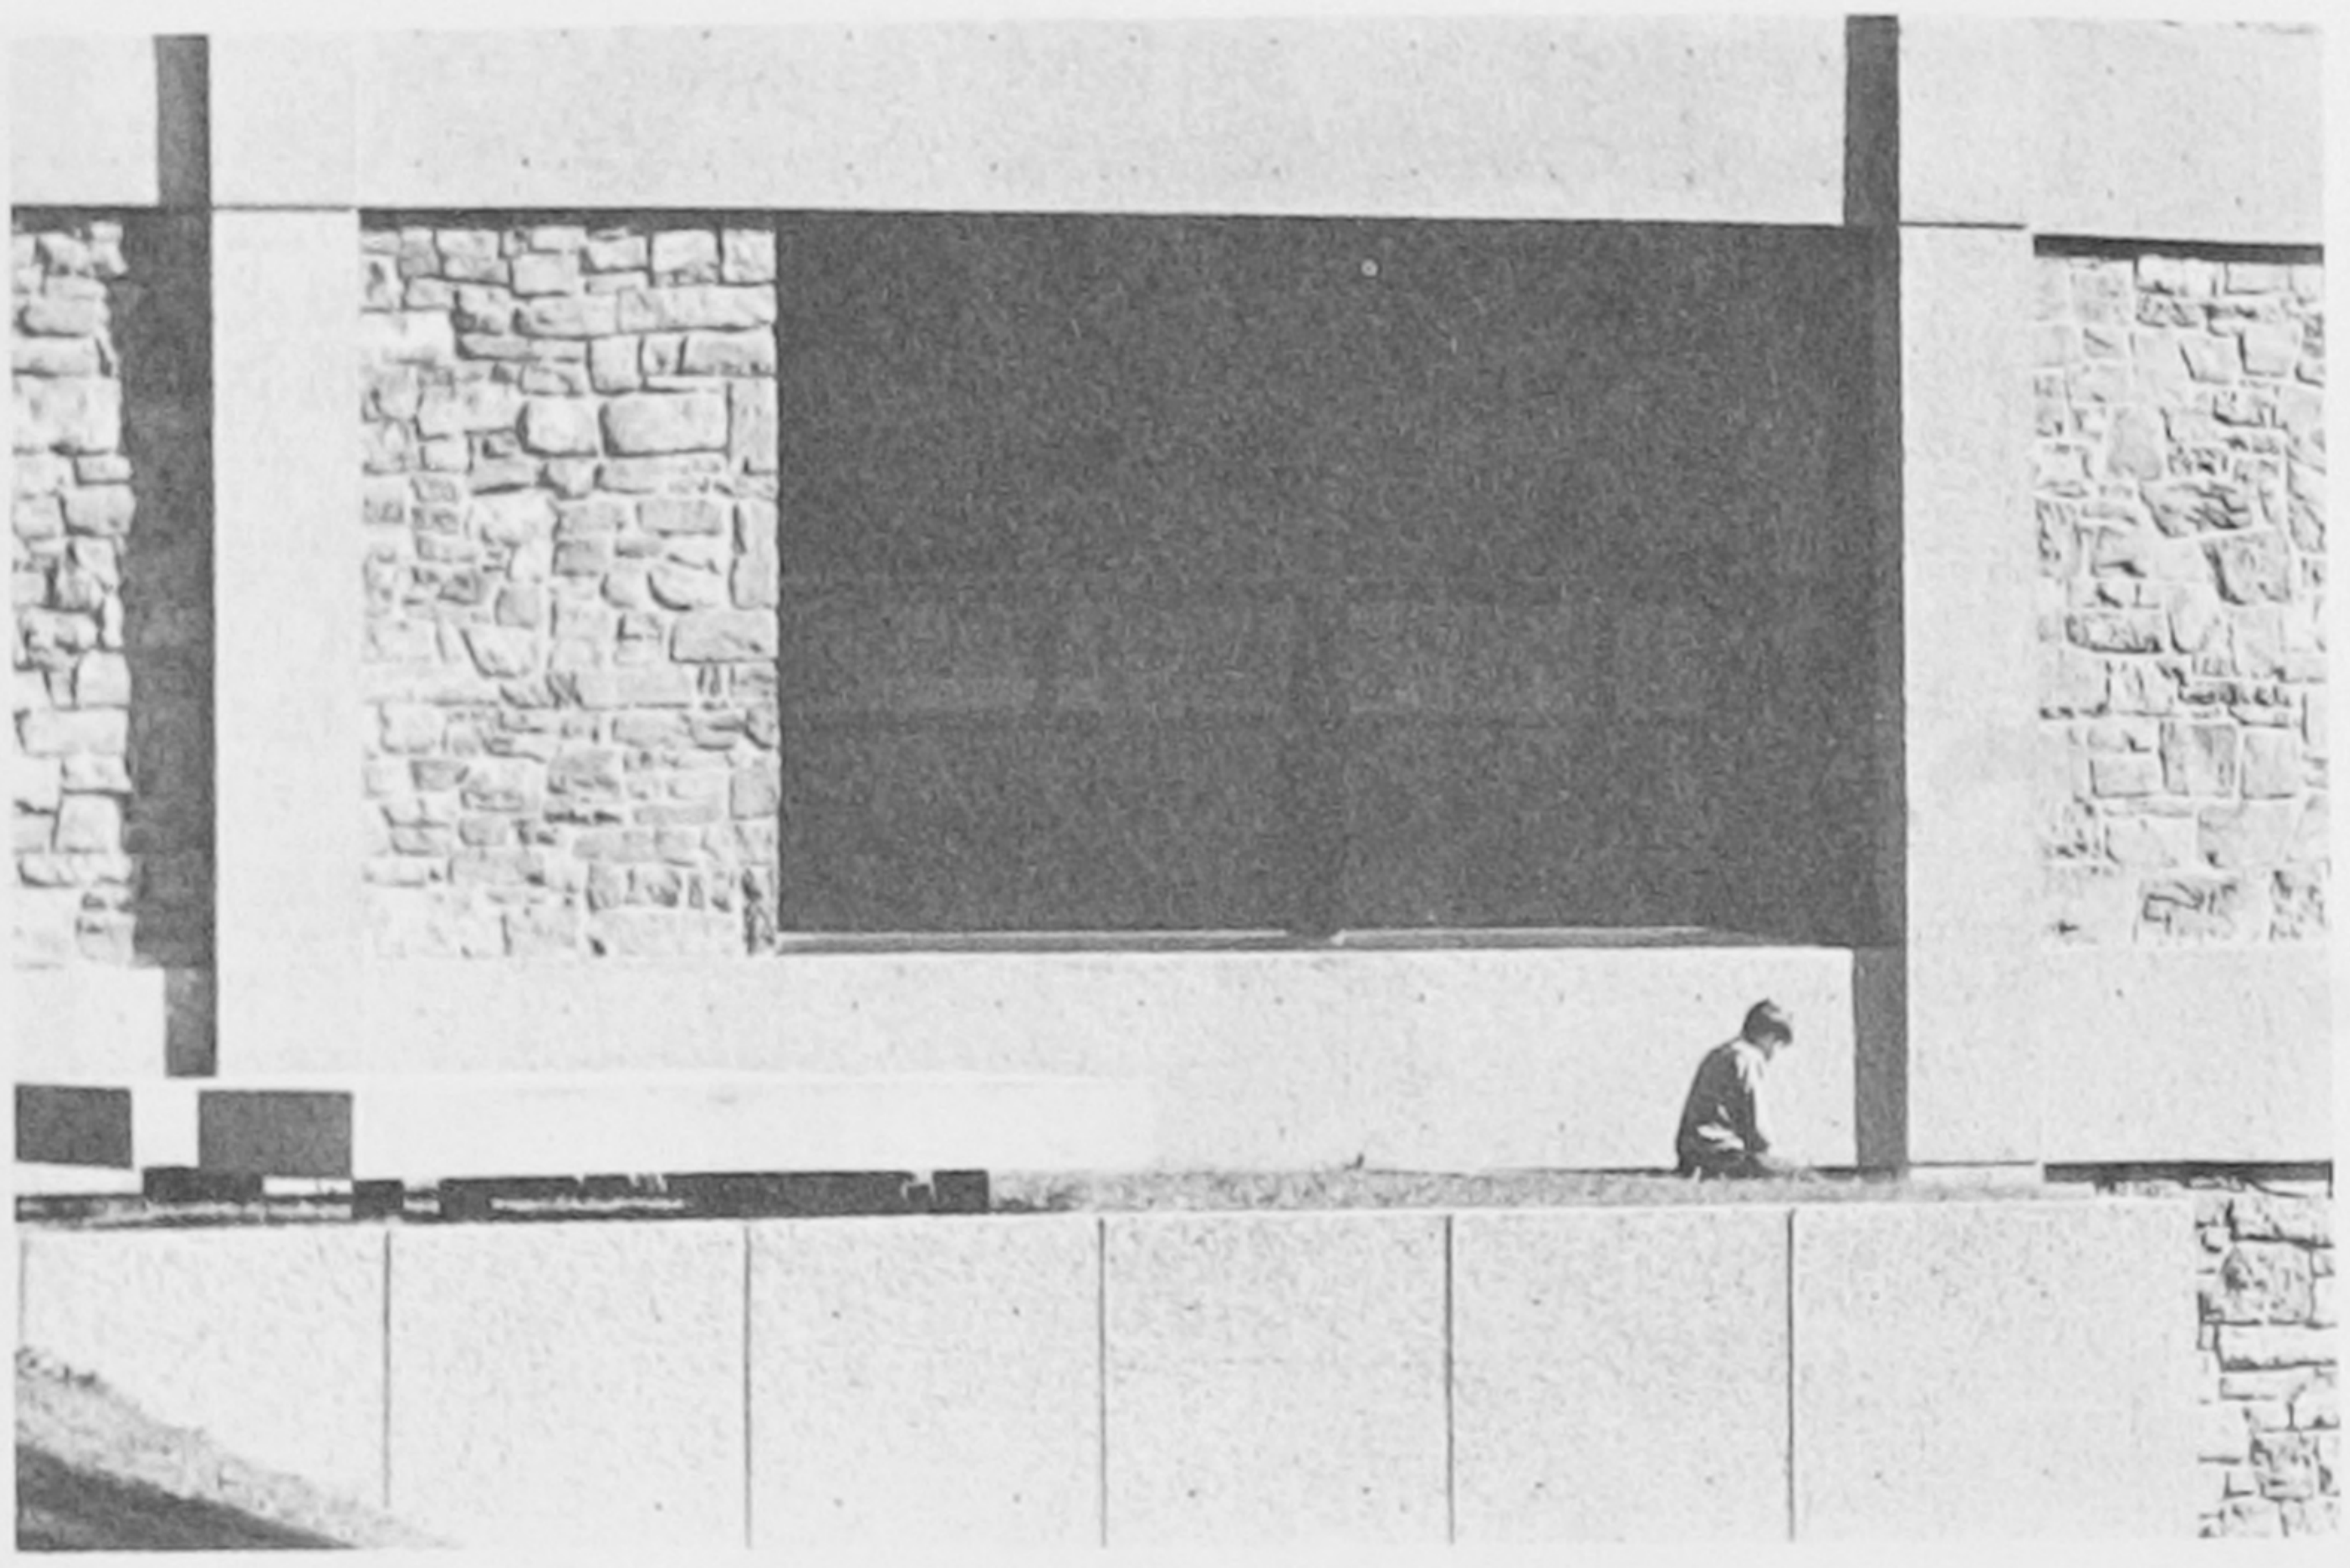
First, how has the campus, itself, changed since 1963?

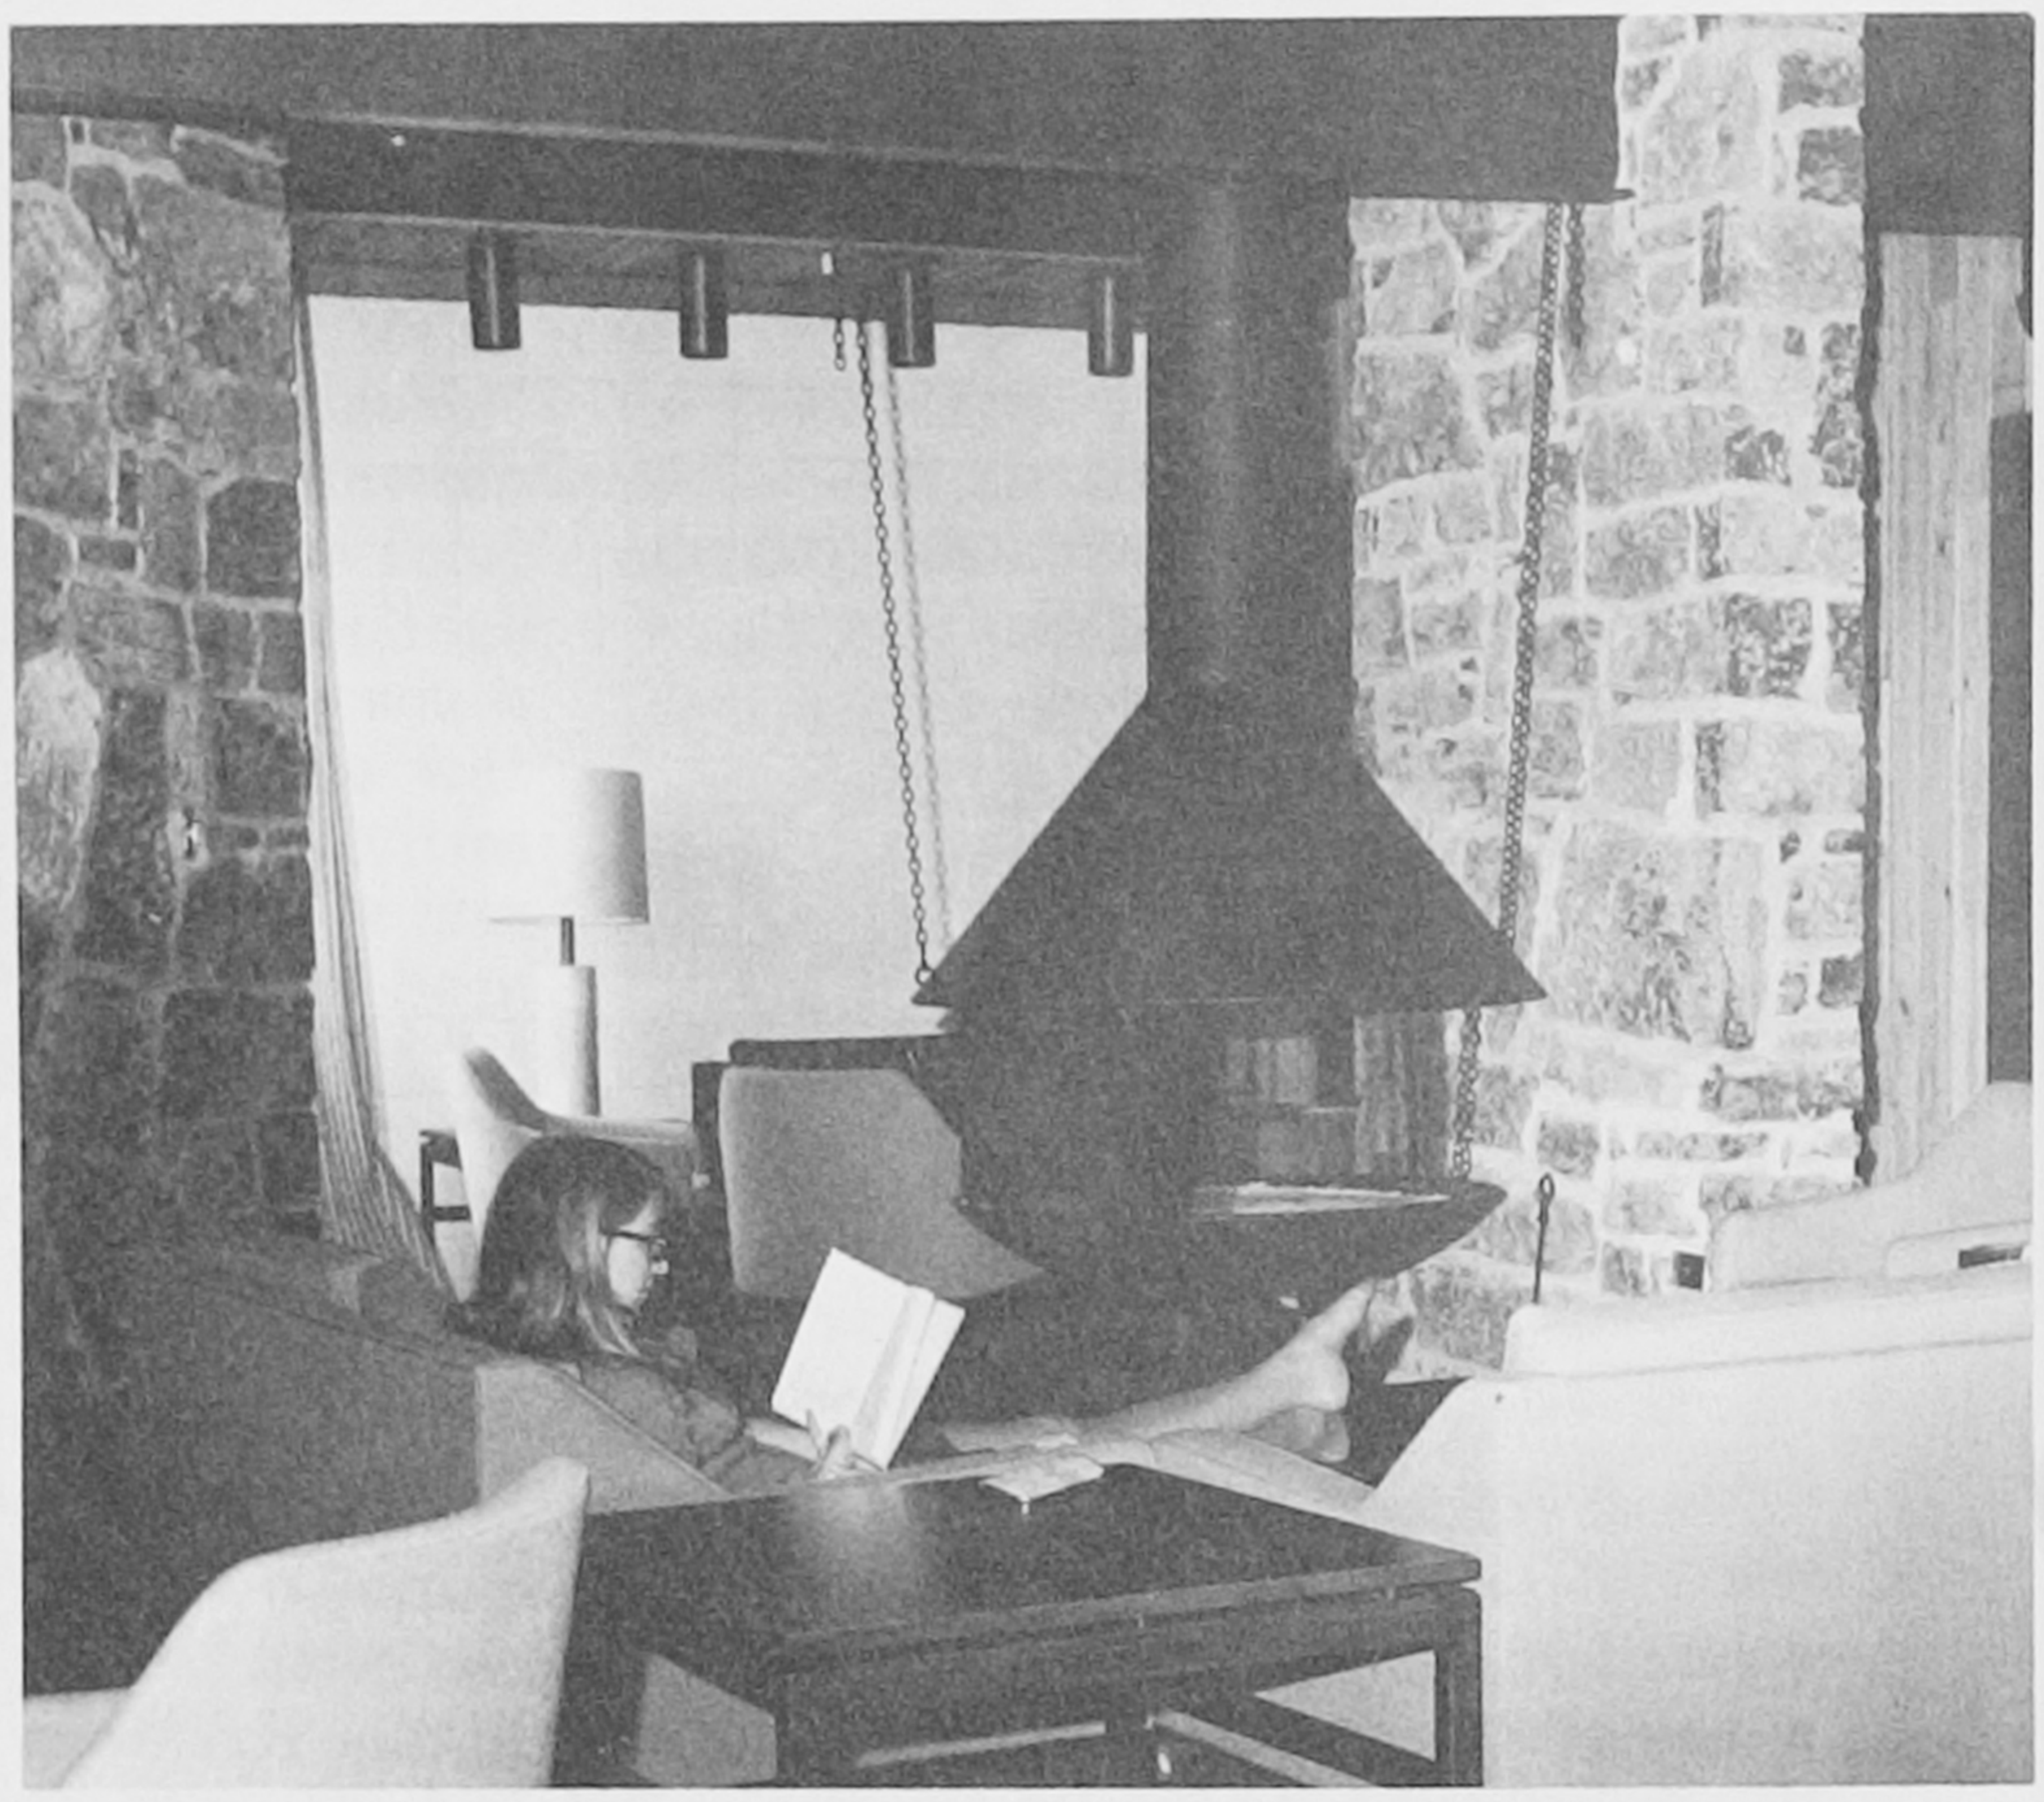
THE HOMESTEAD

If you haven't been back for ten years or more, the first thing you notice is that the old buildings look just the same. The second is that there are a lot of new buildings—twelve in all.

A massive four-story Science Center (1968) stands guard at the town end of the campus—silently affirming that whatever soft gentility clings to the humanities, Science, at least, is a no-nonsense, masculine affair. Up the hill Sunderland Language Center and Dana Auditorium (1965) lie demurely on the corner of College and Chateau where once stood two frame houses. Behind Sunderland-Dana, facing the Battells across Chateau Road, stands the Johnson Memorial Building (1968), whose glass-slabbed facade says clearly that this is no staid memorial to Art Past but a beehive of studios where art is now being done. Up on the brow behind Pearsons stand four new residence halls, Milliken-Hadley (1969) and Kelly-Lang (1971), like tall Swiss chalets done in New England stone. And to the north along the ridge, screened by willows and apple trees, are the student societies (1969) known formally as Freeman, Cook, and Hamlin Halls and vernacularly as the Social-Dining Units, or "SDUs." Finally, on the south edge of campus behind the glistening white Arthur Brown Pool and next to the power plant, the returning visitor sees a neat if unspectacular Service Building (1964). Other new or totally renovated structures are The Deanery, the Infirmary in Carr Hall, and the indoor field now under construction beside Memorial Field House (page 90).

These 12 buildings, the latest decade's investment in Middlebury's future, added 138,000 square feet to instructional space and 194,000 square feet of auxiliary space at a total cost of $12 million. The Sunderland Language Center, Dana Auditorium, the Johnson Memorial Building, and the Science Center all resulted from the Ford Challenge Fund of 1963-65; the indoor playing field is a product of the 175th Anniversary Fund now in progress. The Student Societies complex and the four residence halls were built by the College using low-interest mortgage funds from HUD and the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation; they will be amortized over 30 years.





Although conspicuous symbols, these new facilities scarcely begin to tell the story of the pervasive changes that have occurred within the College in the first ten years, 1963-73, of James I. Armstrong's presidency. In these pages we shall try to suggest both the quantifiable and non-quantifiable aspects of this development ("A revolution!" one professor not given to hyperbole has called it), to examine the differences it has made in the Faculty's teaching and in the undergraduates' learning experience, and to present observations on the College, its fiscal and spiritual condition and its aspirations, by the President and some senior members of faculty.

First, some numbers:

SOURCES OF OPERATING FUNDS IN PAST DECADE

(millions)

Student fees		$45.
Auxiliary enterprises & short-term investment income		10.54
Endowment income		5.63
Gift support:
Foundations	$2.44
Alumni	1.27
Parents & Friends	0.75
Corporations	0.60
		5.06
Gov't grants (student aid, faculty research, etc.)		1.77
Total		$68. million

in 1963, was to be $12,387; in actuality it was $15,400. Inflation has substantially denatured the results of Dr. Armstrong's first-priority efforts to improve compensation of the Faculty. Thus median-compensation increases ranging from 90% to 106% for the four faculty ranks have been diluted to increases, in fixed dollars, of between 50% and 60%. Nevertheless, this sustained administrative effort has made Middlebury's compensation scale far more competitive with the other schools with which she competes for effective faculty men: in 1963-64 when Dr. Armstrong had just come to Middlebury, the College's rating by the AAUP was "D, C, B, B", for compensation of the four faculty ranks; nine years later, using the same criteria but grading in numbers instead of letters, the AAUP rated Middlebury's compensation as "1, 1, 1, 1." Thus the College's faculty compensation ranks in the top quintile of 118 private four-year liberal-arts colleges rated.

Figures on compensation of non-faculty staff are not available, but it is thought that increases for such employees as secretaries, cleaning ladies, cooks, and janitors have averaged much less than the 50 to 60% fixed-dollar increases the Faculty has known.

But faculty salaries are not raised simply by waving a wand. The required funds are raised through the sustained growth of a college development effort whose effect is apparent in the bottom line of the Growth of Gift Support table. Conspicuous in that list is the 592% increase in foundation support—the result of a continuous program spearheaded by the President. Although much of that $9 million went to buildings and equipment—the Johnson Building, Dana-Sunderland, the Science Center, renovation of The Deanery—it also contributed substantially to the endowment of professorships and scholarships totalling nearly $1.5 million. (To these two purposes the current 175th Anniversary Fund has already added almost $2 million in additional endowment.)

"Leadership is not just your own initiative but also the initiative of others;" President Armstrong presents Middlebury's aspirations to alumni and parents at a Perspectives luncheon.

THE STUDENTS

Although enrollment has increased from 1331 in '63-'64 to 1838 last year, a far more profound change has been the emancipation of Middlebury students from a childhood status. "Social life on this campus has opened up remarkably," Dean Dennis O'Brien commented recently. "Ten years ago our students were treated as minors." (See rules, overleaf). "After their freshman year the College didn't even let them eat together. Women ate in Forest or the Chateau; men ate in any of ten fraternities or at the independents' Atwater Club."

Another professor adds that student insistence that their adulthood be acknowledged has greatly improved the entire teaching and learning enterprise:

"Students consistently attacked a lot of nonsensical rules—rules that had taken far too much psychic energy and had got in the way of learning. Rules on parietals, on dress—men could have cars but women couldn't; men over 21 could drink downtown but women couldn't; women had curfews, men didn't—it was just incredible that we had such rules! And the man who should get the credit for getting them

The President inspects site of new indoor field with his chief lieutenants for resources, Walter E. Brooker '37, VP-Development, left, and Carroll Rikert, Jr., Treasurer.

The College's 10-year expenditure on education has been $68 million. Two-thirds of this sum was supplied by parents of the students enrolled; of the $23 million balance, 46% was supplied from income of auxiliary enterprises and of short-term investments, 24% from endowment income, 22% from voluntary gift support (by foundations, alumni, parents, friends, and corporations) and 8% by grants from state and federal agencies. (See Sources of Operating Funds in Past Decade.)

Since any parent will tell you that the costs of putting a son or daughter through college has gone out of sight in the last ten years, the writer was surprised to discover that the increase in student fees at Middlebury has only equalled the rise in the consumer price index—that is, has just compensated for inflation. Expressed in 1963 dollars, there has been an increase of less than 4/10ths of one percent; but even this small increase would disappear if "special course fees" of $1 to $20 per course, charged in 1963, were averaged and figured into the '63 costs.

Meanwhile the College is supplying each student with 10% more goods and services: at least the College's expenditure per student has increased 10%, in fixed dollars. (In actual dollars it's more than doubled —i.e., risen 107.5%.)

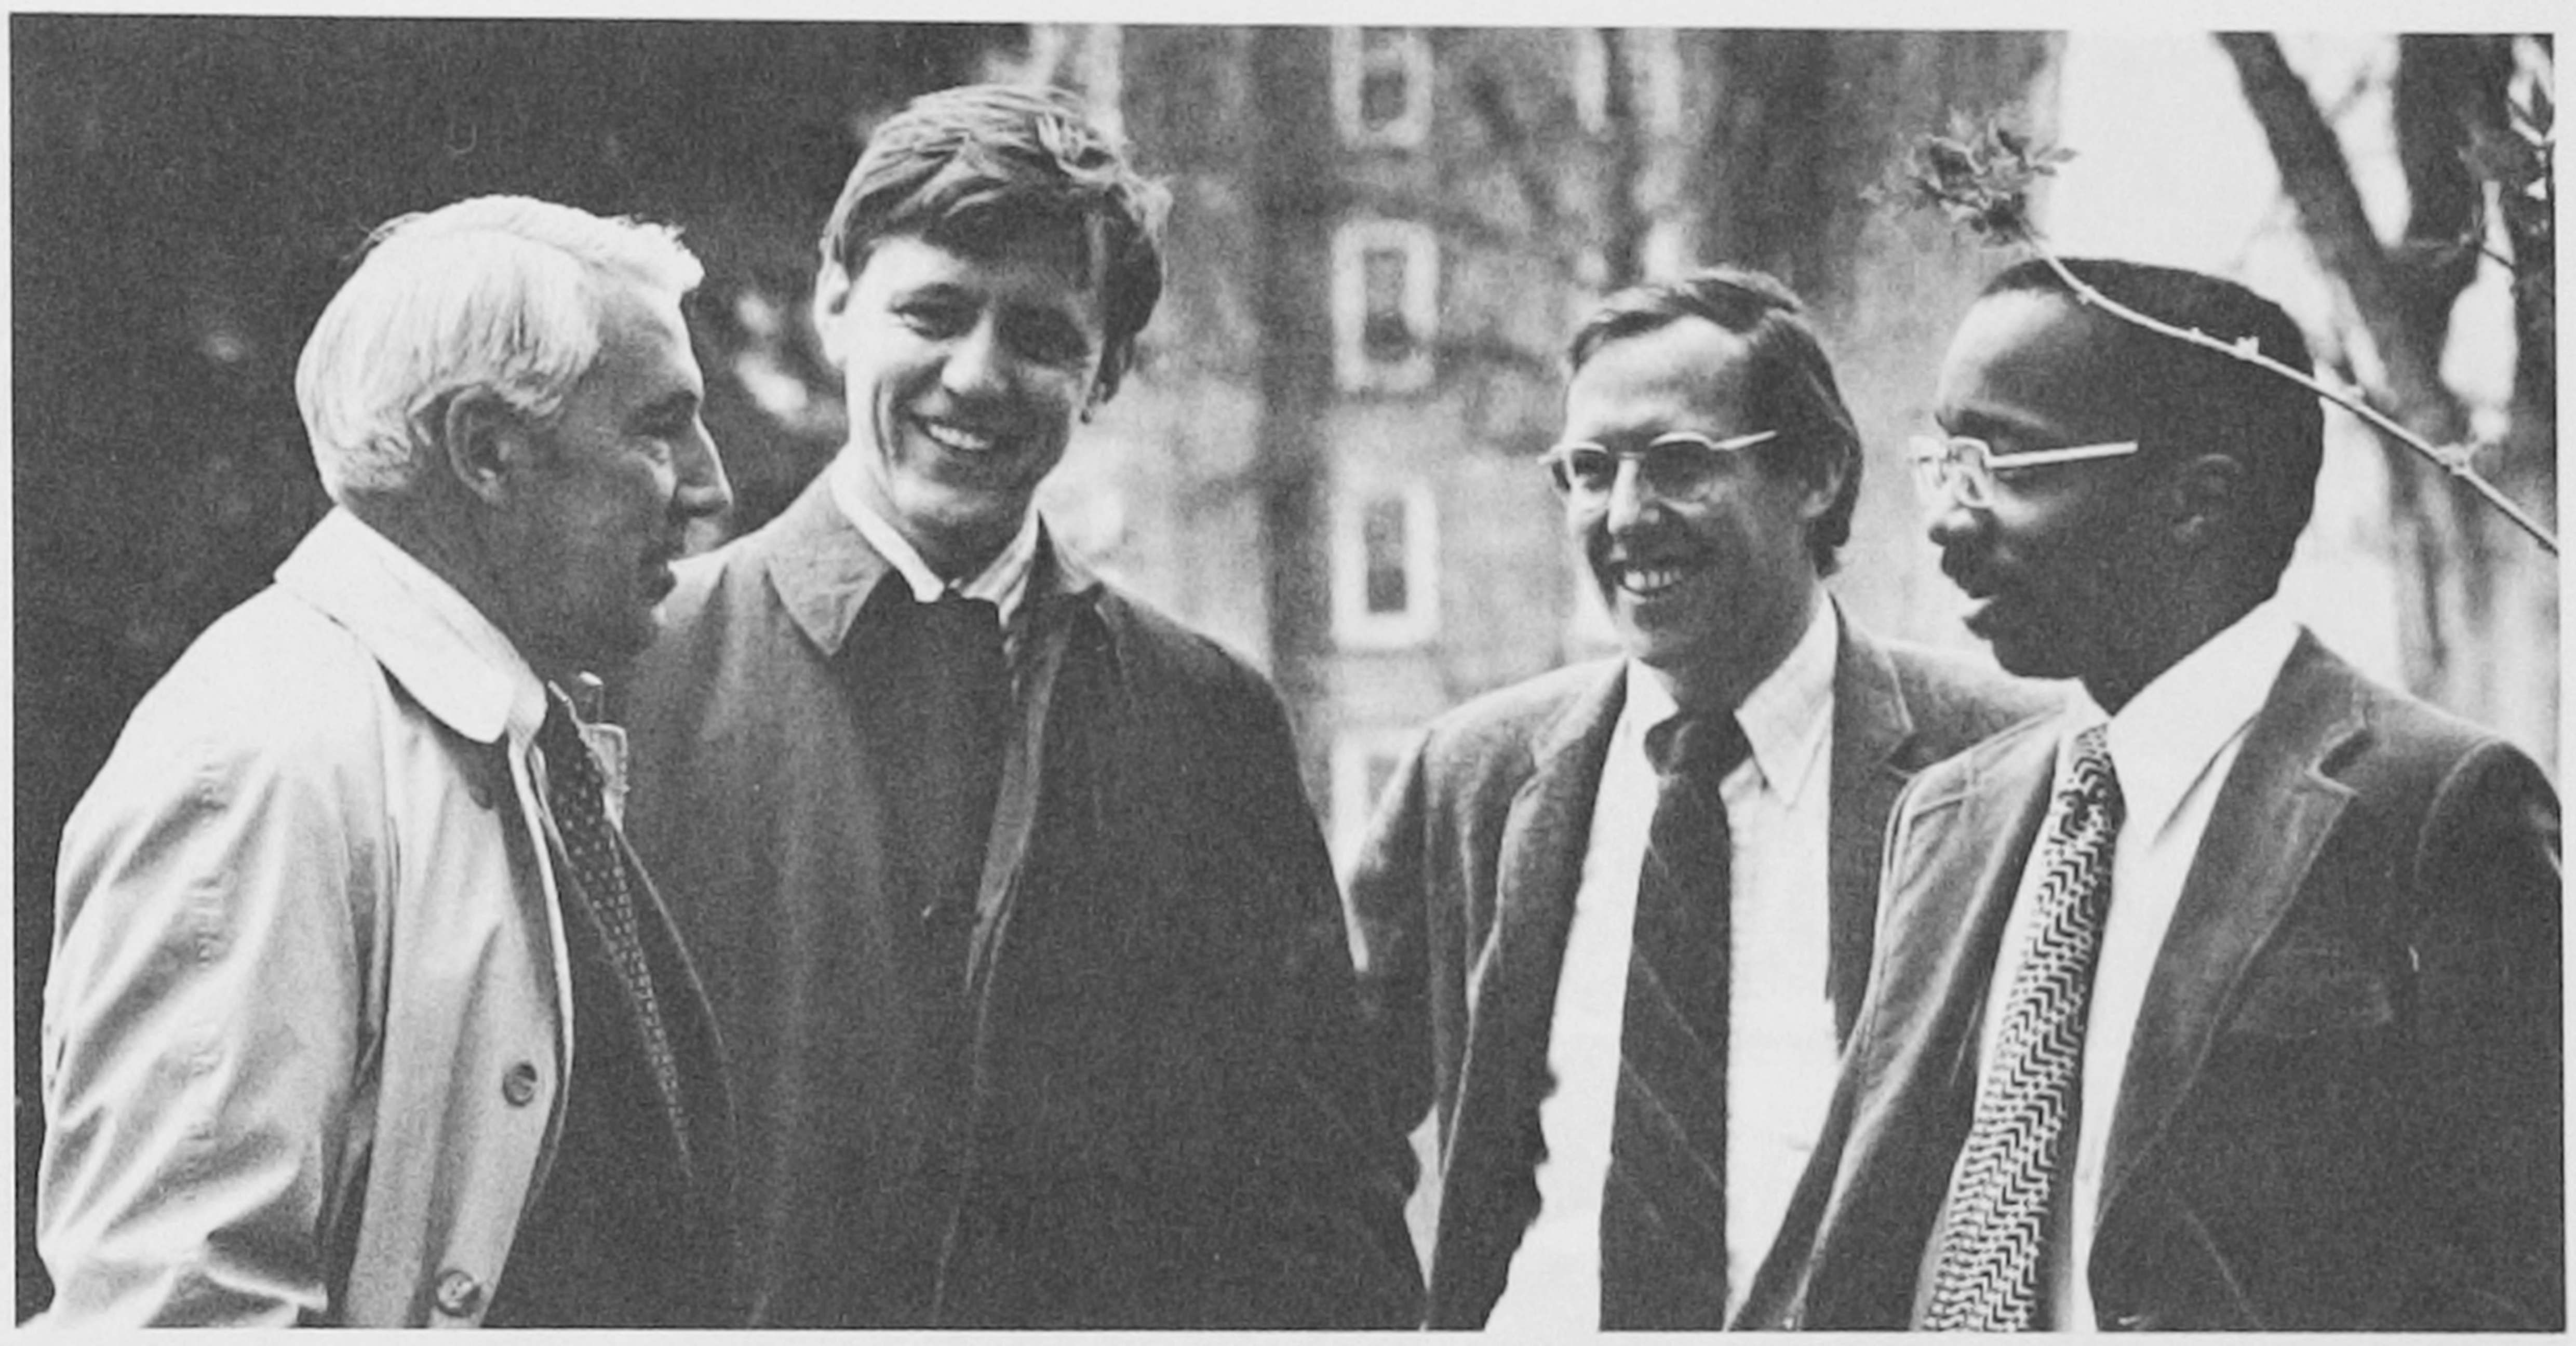
THESE NUMBERS TELL IT ALL

Maintaining educational standards throughout an inflationary period without pricing your service out of the market has been, of course, the prime challenge of college administrators everywhere. Concerning a 10-year projection prepared in 1963 for the Ford Foundation, President Armstrong recalls, "We forecast the size of the institution correctly, the number of years it would take to reach 1800, and the size of the faculty very accurately. We were right on target with regard to the new resources that we would be able to secure over a period of ten years. The place where we failed, and the surprise, was that we under-estimated very, very significantly what the operational budget in this institution would be, what it would cost to operate the institution ten years hence; that is, what the income would have to be in order to operate it. We said (in that time we were budgeted around 3.6 million) that we would probably be budgeted around 7.8 million in ten years—and we are budgeted now at 12 million!

"Some part of that increase is inflation, but the rest represents aspirations that exceeded those that we anticipated; the faculty salaries we did not foresee, but we also didn't foresee anywhere nearly what it would cost to pay a full professor in his middle forties, in 1974, when we were thinking ahead in 1964. Then—and I think this is not an insignificant comment—at that time faculty salaries at Middlebury College were not genuinely competitive with comparable institutions. And we knew, then, that if we were going to be a strong institution in the years ahead and attract good students and faculty, we were going to have to emphasize faculty salaries, so I think it's a combination of a determination to pay well, to compensate for performance, and of inflation."

The 1972 average faculty compensation, as projected



On an inspection tour of student housing last spring, the President discusses needs with Dean of the College Dennis O'Brien, Associate Dean of Students Tim Carey '65, and Assistant Dean of Students Arnold McKinney '70. O'Brien, who's also professor of Philosophy, helped channel 1960s revolution in student expectations into constructive evolution of College policy.

We asked a number of senior professors to compare the capacities and outlooks of today's students with those of ten or more years ago. Herewith, some comments:

"When I first came here the women were very sharp, the men were klunks. I used to flunk one man out of four. Now some of my best students are men and I almost never flunk anybody. And it isn't me, it's the caliber of work that's being done.

"Today students expect more from their teachers—you never can tell what size class you have for the first two weeks of the term: the students are shopping around; if they don't like the first couple of lectures, they switch courses. And I can't blame them—they're paying enough; why shouldn't they get the kind of education they want?"

"Certainly the call for relevancy in the late '60s seems to have had its impact, I think, on the kind of thing we're doing, and we're trying to arrange courses which will be more attractive—a little more enticing—and I think possibly the students seem to feel that you have to come to them. You come to them more than they're coming to you. I think that the fact that the students have improved in quality over the years makes it a good deal more fun to work with them. Simply that they learn more easily; they learn more quickly. And to me it's a great deal more pleasant to work with active, quick, intelligent students than with somebody who is slow and plodding, who doesn't seem to understand and get what's being said. And I would say that the gap between the brightest and slowest has closed."

"Today's students are more seriously committed to scholarly activity—more concerned to learn, rather than merely pass the course. They expect more, today, and are less reluctant to complain if they're not getting it—for instance, if they have a teacher who isn't getting the subject across. They have a clearer idea of what they want and if they don't get it, they aren't going to just sit back passively."

"The self-esteem of today's students—especially the men—seems higher," Dean O'Brien believes. "Ten years ago the men may have been just as capable, but they didn't see themselves that way: fewer men aspired to Honors-level work or to going on for an advanced degree. Today our students, on average, see themselves as intellectually top-grade; they expect their ideas to be taken seriously by their teachers and their peers.

"Middlebury has long been popular with women, but until recently somewhat less so with men," O'Brien continued. "Until about five years ago there was an average of only about a thousand male applicants for each freshman class. Now it's closer to 2,000. (Applications by women have averaged 1900 per class for the past decade.) So this means that, with twice as many men to choose from, we're now able to make a stronger male freshman class."

The break came with applications for the Class of '72; male applicants for that and the next four classes averaged 1815 per class, as against an average of 1127 male applicants for each of the previous six classes (an increase of 61%). Meanwhile, applications from women, averaged for the same two periods, increased only 29%.

abolished," he added, "is Dennis O'Brien. He absorbed all the student pressure being exerted against regulations that, privately, Dennis didn't consider defensible; then he turned around and persuaded the Administration that those regulations should be abandoned. The students saw him only as an antagonist; they never realized that he was their best friend at court."

"As you know, during the past ten years there have been very significant changes," the President recalled recently, "because we were not, then, fully coeducational, here: in 1964 we did have both men and women and we admitted them, I suppose, in a sense equally, but there was a strong trace of a 'men's college' and a 'women's college,' and it continued and still shows up in curious ways every now and then. And there were old taboos which have since withered away—that the alumni of the '40s and '50s simply can't understand. 'You mean that men live in dormitories across College Street?!'—that kind of thing. 'That men and women dine together?' 'That fraternities are no longer the swing force on the campus?' There was a segregated men's fraternal organization that was, in a way, a dominant social force on the campus—that dominated choice. The women simply sat up in Forest and waited to get an invitation to go to a fraternity! Coeducation, today, no longer means a men's institution to which women are admitted!"

"And I do think we have, now, a greater degree of openness on the campus than we had prior to '66-'67, in a whole variety of ways. We're communicating better, much more directly; questions are asked, you get more open, direct, honest answers in the whole financial area. That used to be very, very hush-hush and remote and you didn't look at the budget, not even faculty members. Now it's different: it's all completely defensible; it always has been defensible; why shouldn't it be out there for all to look at? One may disagree and say we shouldn't spend that much money on this or that much money on that, but you come back with your defense by saying we're doing it this way for the following reasons. One may disagree, but it's open. I think that there is that expectation on the part of the students; they've brought that to us and we've responded to it. On the other hand, I think that the students have not responded fully to their part of the opening up of things. During the debate over parietal hours there was always the assurance given to the Faculty and the Administration by the students that they would manage their own lives in such a way that they would genuinely respect one another. And it's there, I think, that we haven't really faced up to it, and it's my hope that we can find some ways to assist students to do it. They've got to do it! There's no going back to the '50s and there's no going back to regulations."

WOMEN'S SOCIAL LEGISLATION

I. Members of the Women's College of Middlebury are not to engage in practices which might injure the good name of Middlebury women.

II. Smoking

A. Women shall not be permitted to smoke in the following places:

1. While walking
2. In the living rooms (except Battell North and South) or entrance halls of dormitories.
3. In the dining rooms except Proctor
4. Outside of all college and town buildings

III. Dancing

A. Dancing is not permitted in the living rooms of dormitories but it is allowed in the recreation rooms.

B. College women are not permitted to attend public dances in Middlebury or the surrounding area unless they have the approval of the Dean of Women or the Chief Justice.

C. College women may not dance on Sunday in any public place.

1. "Public place" means any place outsiders are likely to come. In the dormitories, this includes the living rooms but not the recreation rooms.

VII. Lateness:

A. Each girl shall keep a record of her own late minutes on a card kept with the sign-out cards.

1. The House President shall record these late minutes in her book at the end of every two weeks.

a. She will issue a warning when a girl has accumulated ten late minutes.

B. When a girl has accumulated fifteen late minutes, she shall report to the House President, who will inform the Chief Justice, and shall automatically receive regular campus restriction for three days.

V. Clothing Code

A. Classes

1. Skirts or dresses required.

B. Chapel

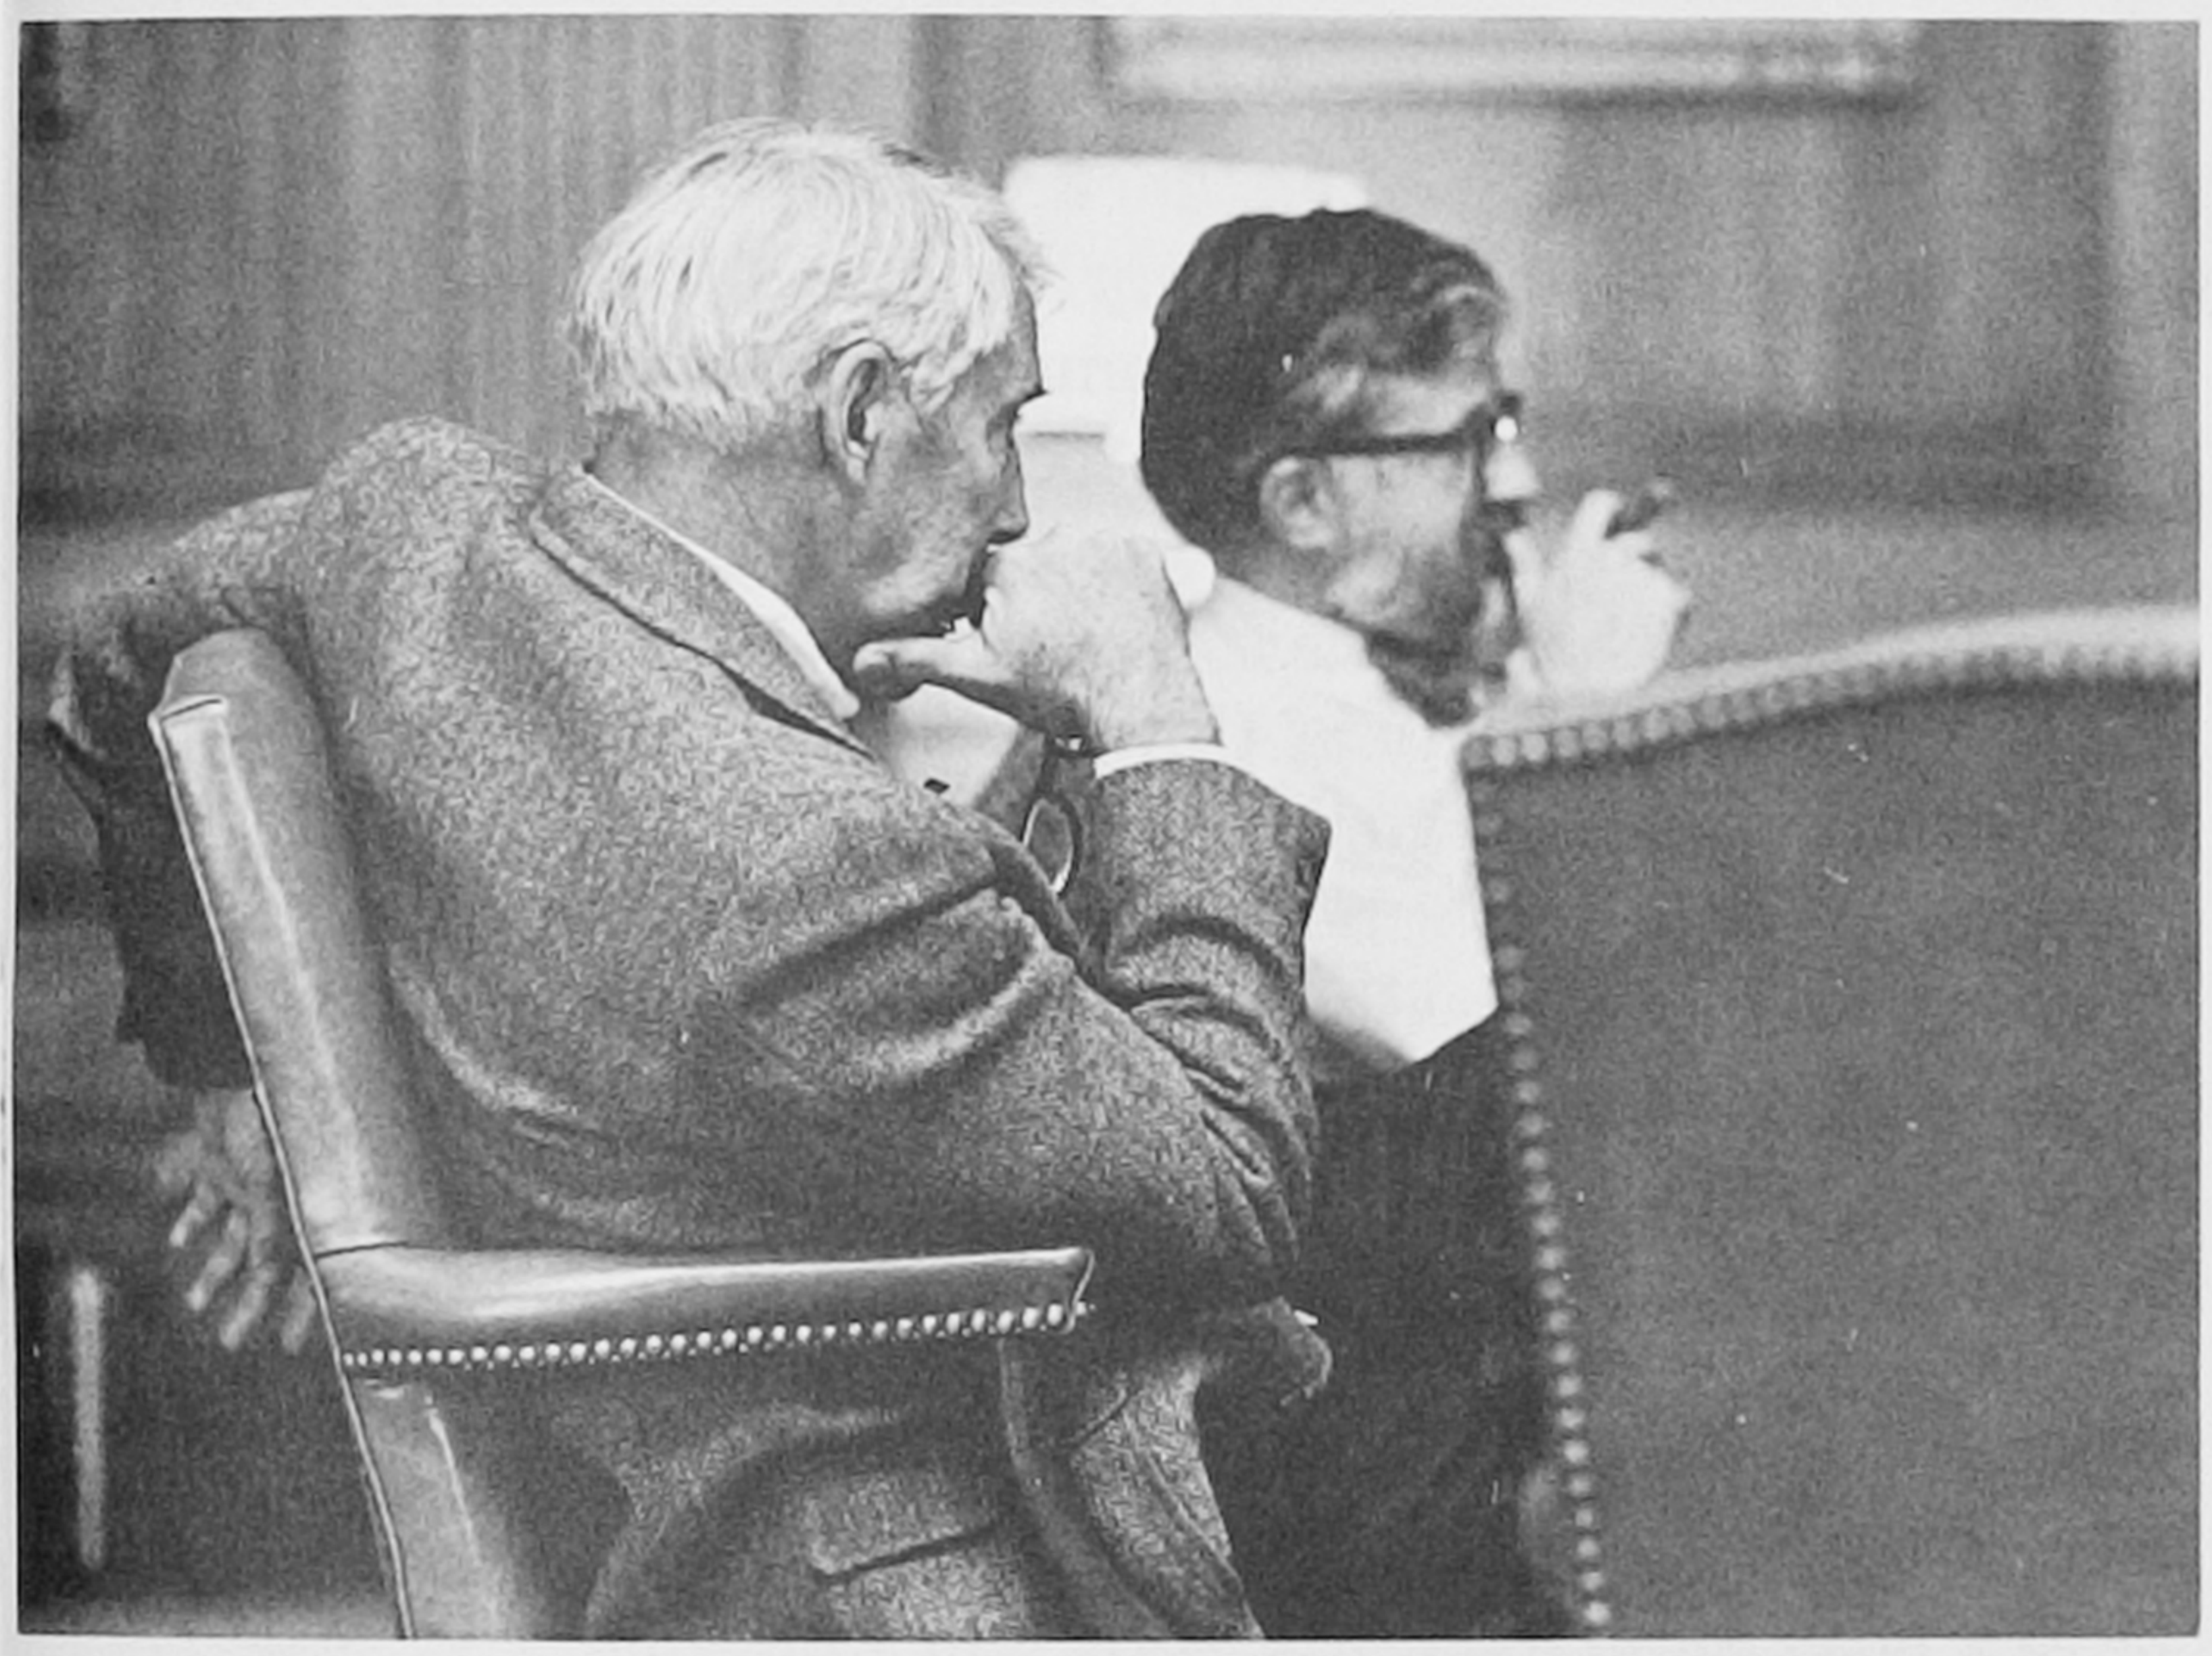
1. Hats suggested, stockings required.

C. Dining rooms

1. Skirts or dresses required for all meals except breakfast. Night clothes are not acceptable at breakfast.
2. Girls are required to wear stockings to Sunday dinner and should dress accordingly.
3. During final exams, bermuda shorts and slacks are allowed for all meals, except dinner. Stockings are not required for Sunday dinner during this period.
4. Bermuda shorts or slacks are permitted for lunch on Saturday.
5. Proctor Hall — Girls eating in Proctor Hall Dining Room must wear skirts or dresses at all meals. Without exception.

F. Bermuda shorts and slacks are not to be worn in the following places:

1. Athletic events, classes (except labs), Chapel, Old Chapel, (administration building), in the Library, in the lounge of Proctor Hall, or any place downtown.
2. The only exception is hockey and football games where slacks may be worn.



He has also, because of financial strengthening of the institution, been able to recruit more aggressively.

"The 'psychology' of the Faculty under Dr. Stratton was very much that of finding one's identity in the institution—thus we were inevitably rather parochial. Armstrong deliberately fostered a growth of each faculty member's awareness of himself as a member of his profession, as a scholar in his field. This seemed to begin during the Ford Challenge Fund—we began to view ourselves as professionals, members of a national group, instead of teachers in a particular college.

"He also inaugurated one of the most generous faculty-leave policies in the country: whereby leaves at full pay are granted not automatically every seven years, but rather on the basis of the merits of a professor's study proposal—that is, its contribution to his further growth in scholarship and so, indirectly, to his future value as a teacher of Middlebury's students.

"In fairness to Stratton, however, and in any broad historical view of the life of this College, Stratton was the man-of-the-century. He kept this institution from closing its doors in the dark days of 1943 when it really looked as though the College was about to die after 143 years! We had no men, here, at all and enrollments were barely half of what they'd been when the War began. Stratton went to Washington and brought a Navy V-12 program to Middlebury—which saw us through. After the war he also made the key appointment that was to move the institution ahead—he brought Walter Brooker, here, as director of development. So in his 20 years as president, Stratton moved the College from near-disaster up to a level of reasonable strength on which his successor has been able to build so dramatically.

"The other key man in the College's recent growth, Carroll Rikert, Jr., was an Armstrong appointment. These two men—Brooker and Rikert—have meant a fantastic strengthening of Middlebury's financial position. Of course it was the President who made it all work and he himself has made an almost incredible record in soliciting foundation support for the College!"

Other comments by senior professors on changes in the past decade:

"There's much more professionalism; the Faculty has more intellectual vitality today. They're more involved in national professional meetings and with their own research—possibly at the expense of their teaching.

"Part of this, but I think only part, is the tenure squeeze: in the past two or three years, younger faculty members have been more concerned about what's going to happen to them, and they've had

At bi-monthly luncheon in Old Chapel with divisional and departmental chairmen (left and opposite) College's instructional administrators discuss ways and means of implementing Middlebury's educational goals. At right, historian William Catton confers with the President, and at bottom Dr. Armstrong makes a point as geologist Peter Coney, left, and Dean of the Faculty Richard Turner consider.

Nevertheless Middlebury remains somewhat more selective for women applicants than for men: last year there were nearly 5.6 men applicants for every freshman man who entered, but nearly 7.3 women applicants for each freshman woman who entered.

THE FACULTY

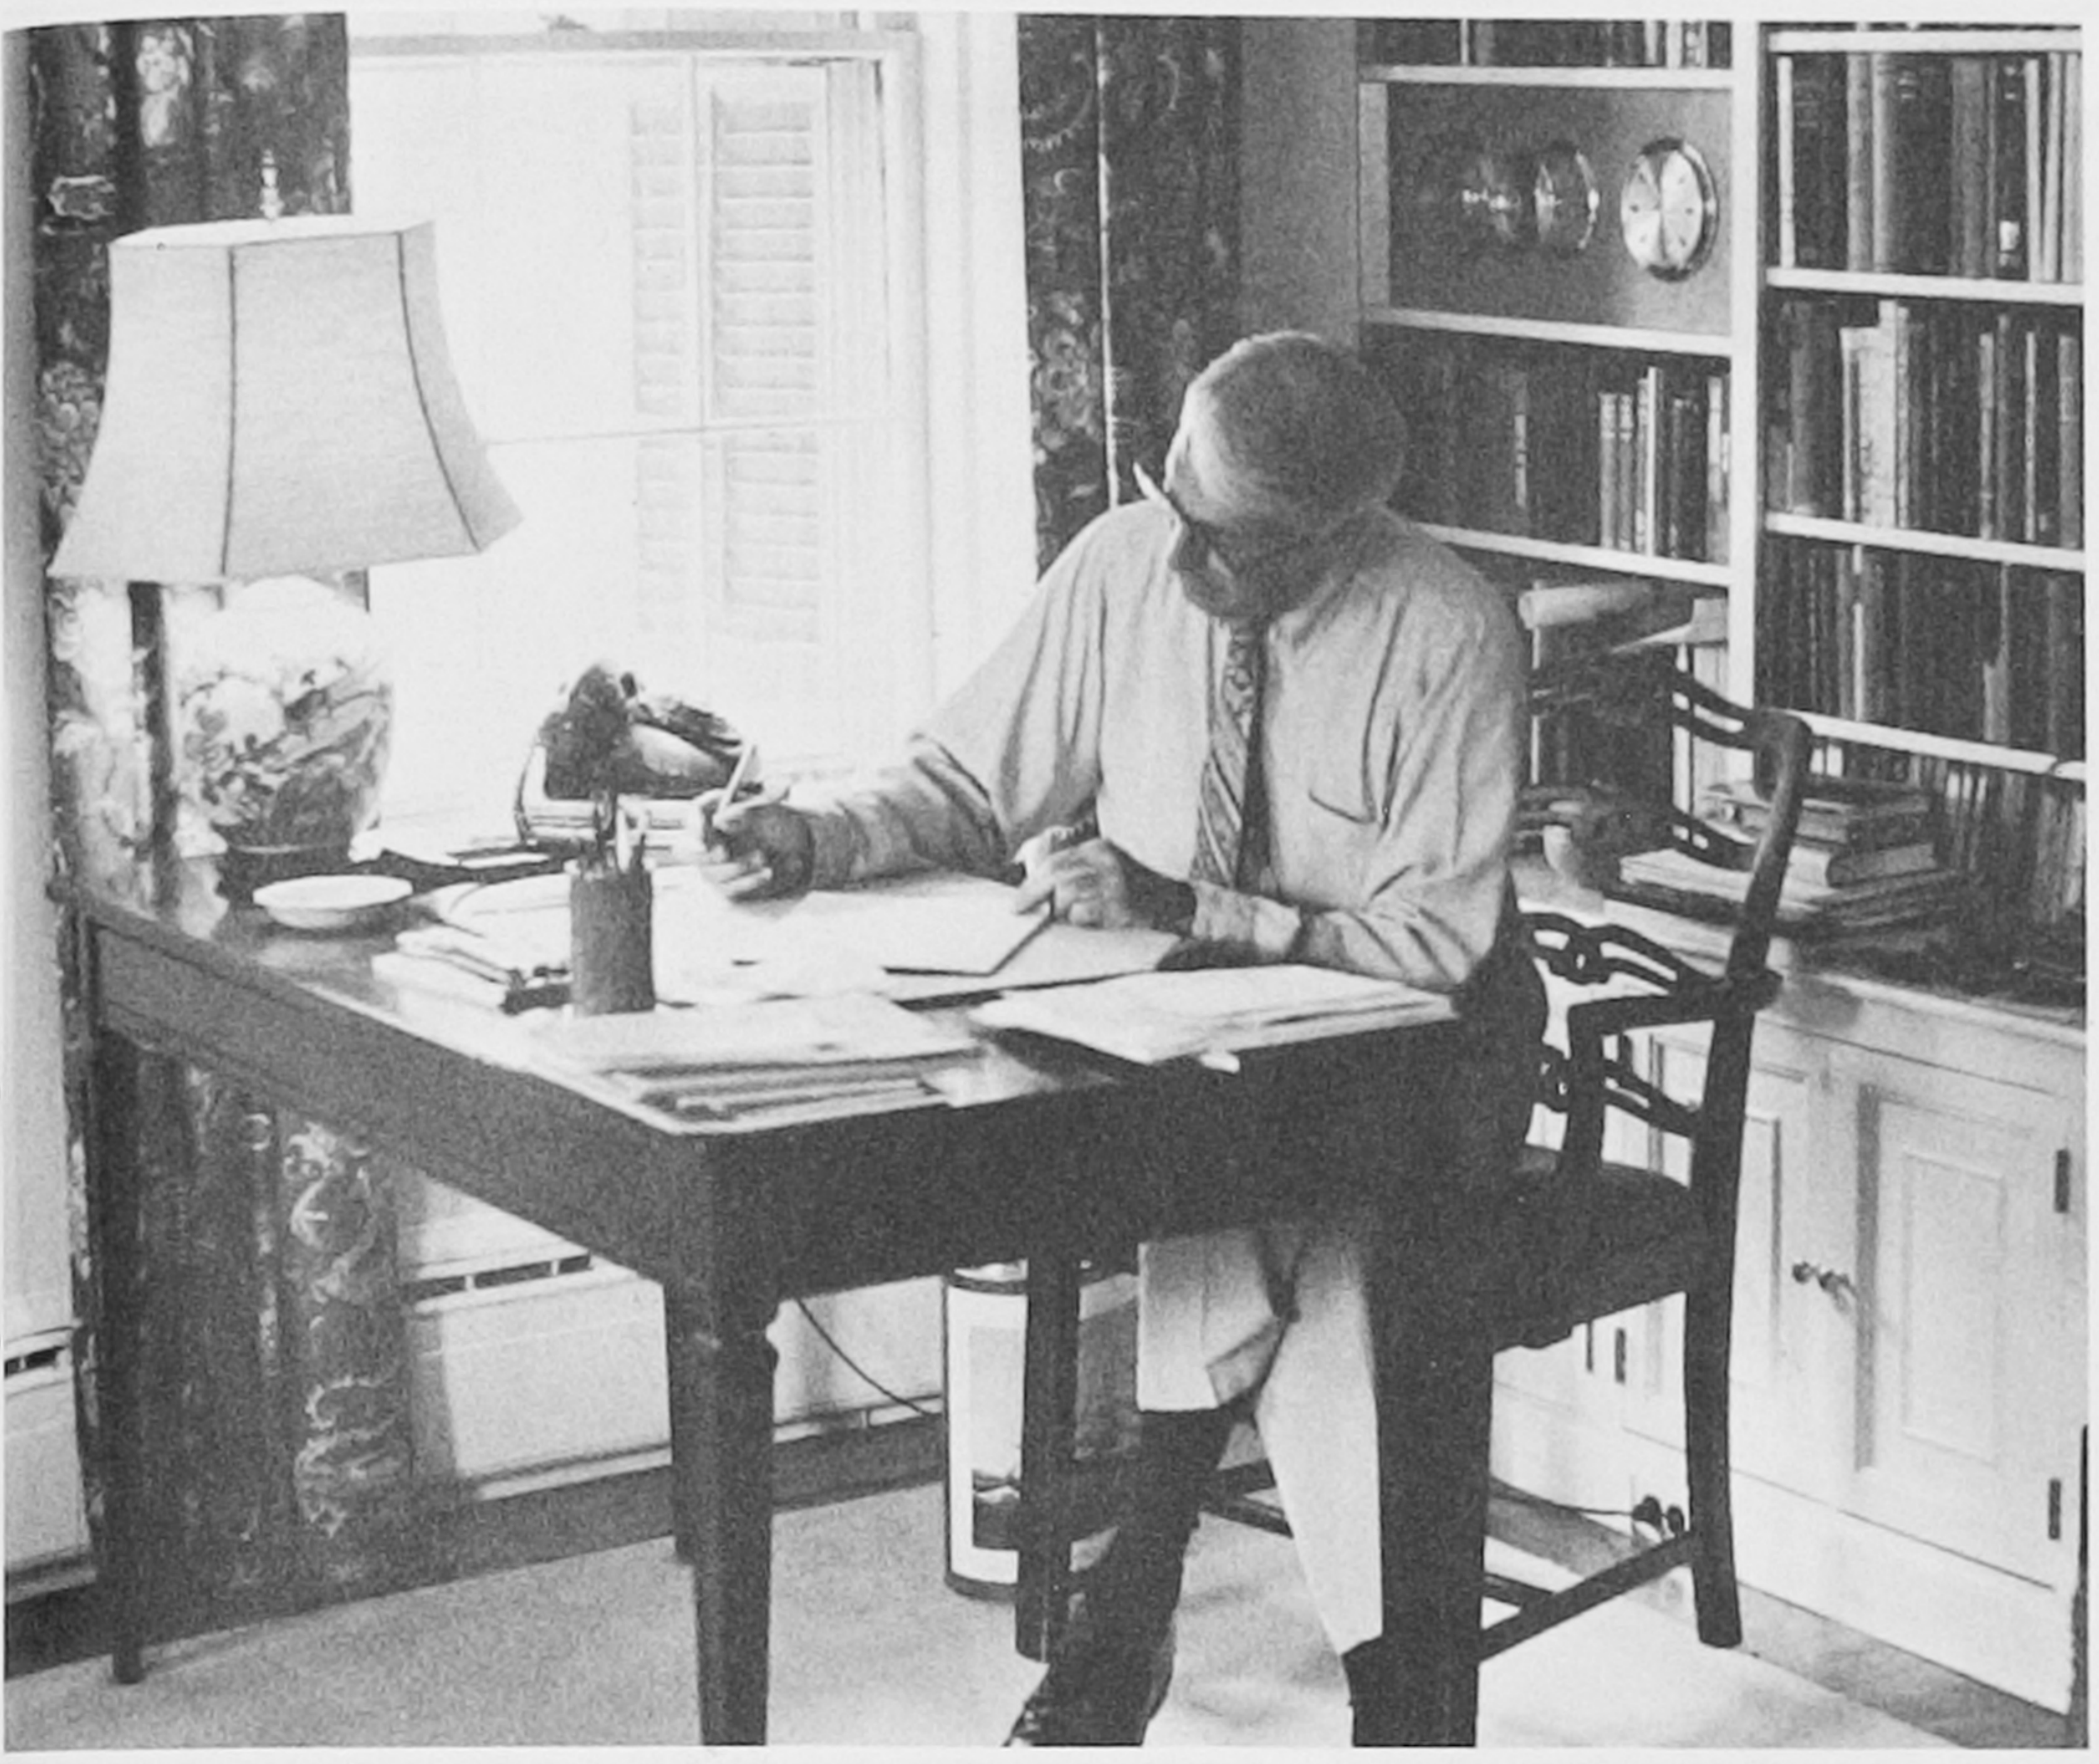
With a 39% increase in enrollment (from 1331 to 1838) there's been a 41% increase in faculty (99 to 140). But this growth, although it has inevitably reduced collegial feeling among faculty members, is far less significant than other, qualitative changes in the Faculty. Indeed upgrading the scholarly strength of the Middlebury faculty has held a higher priority in the President's personal "must-do" list than any other single need.

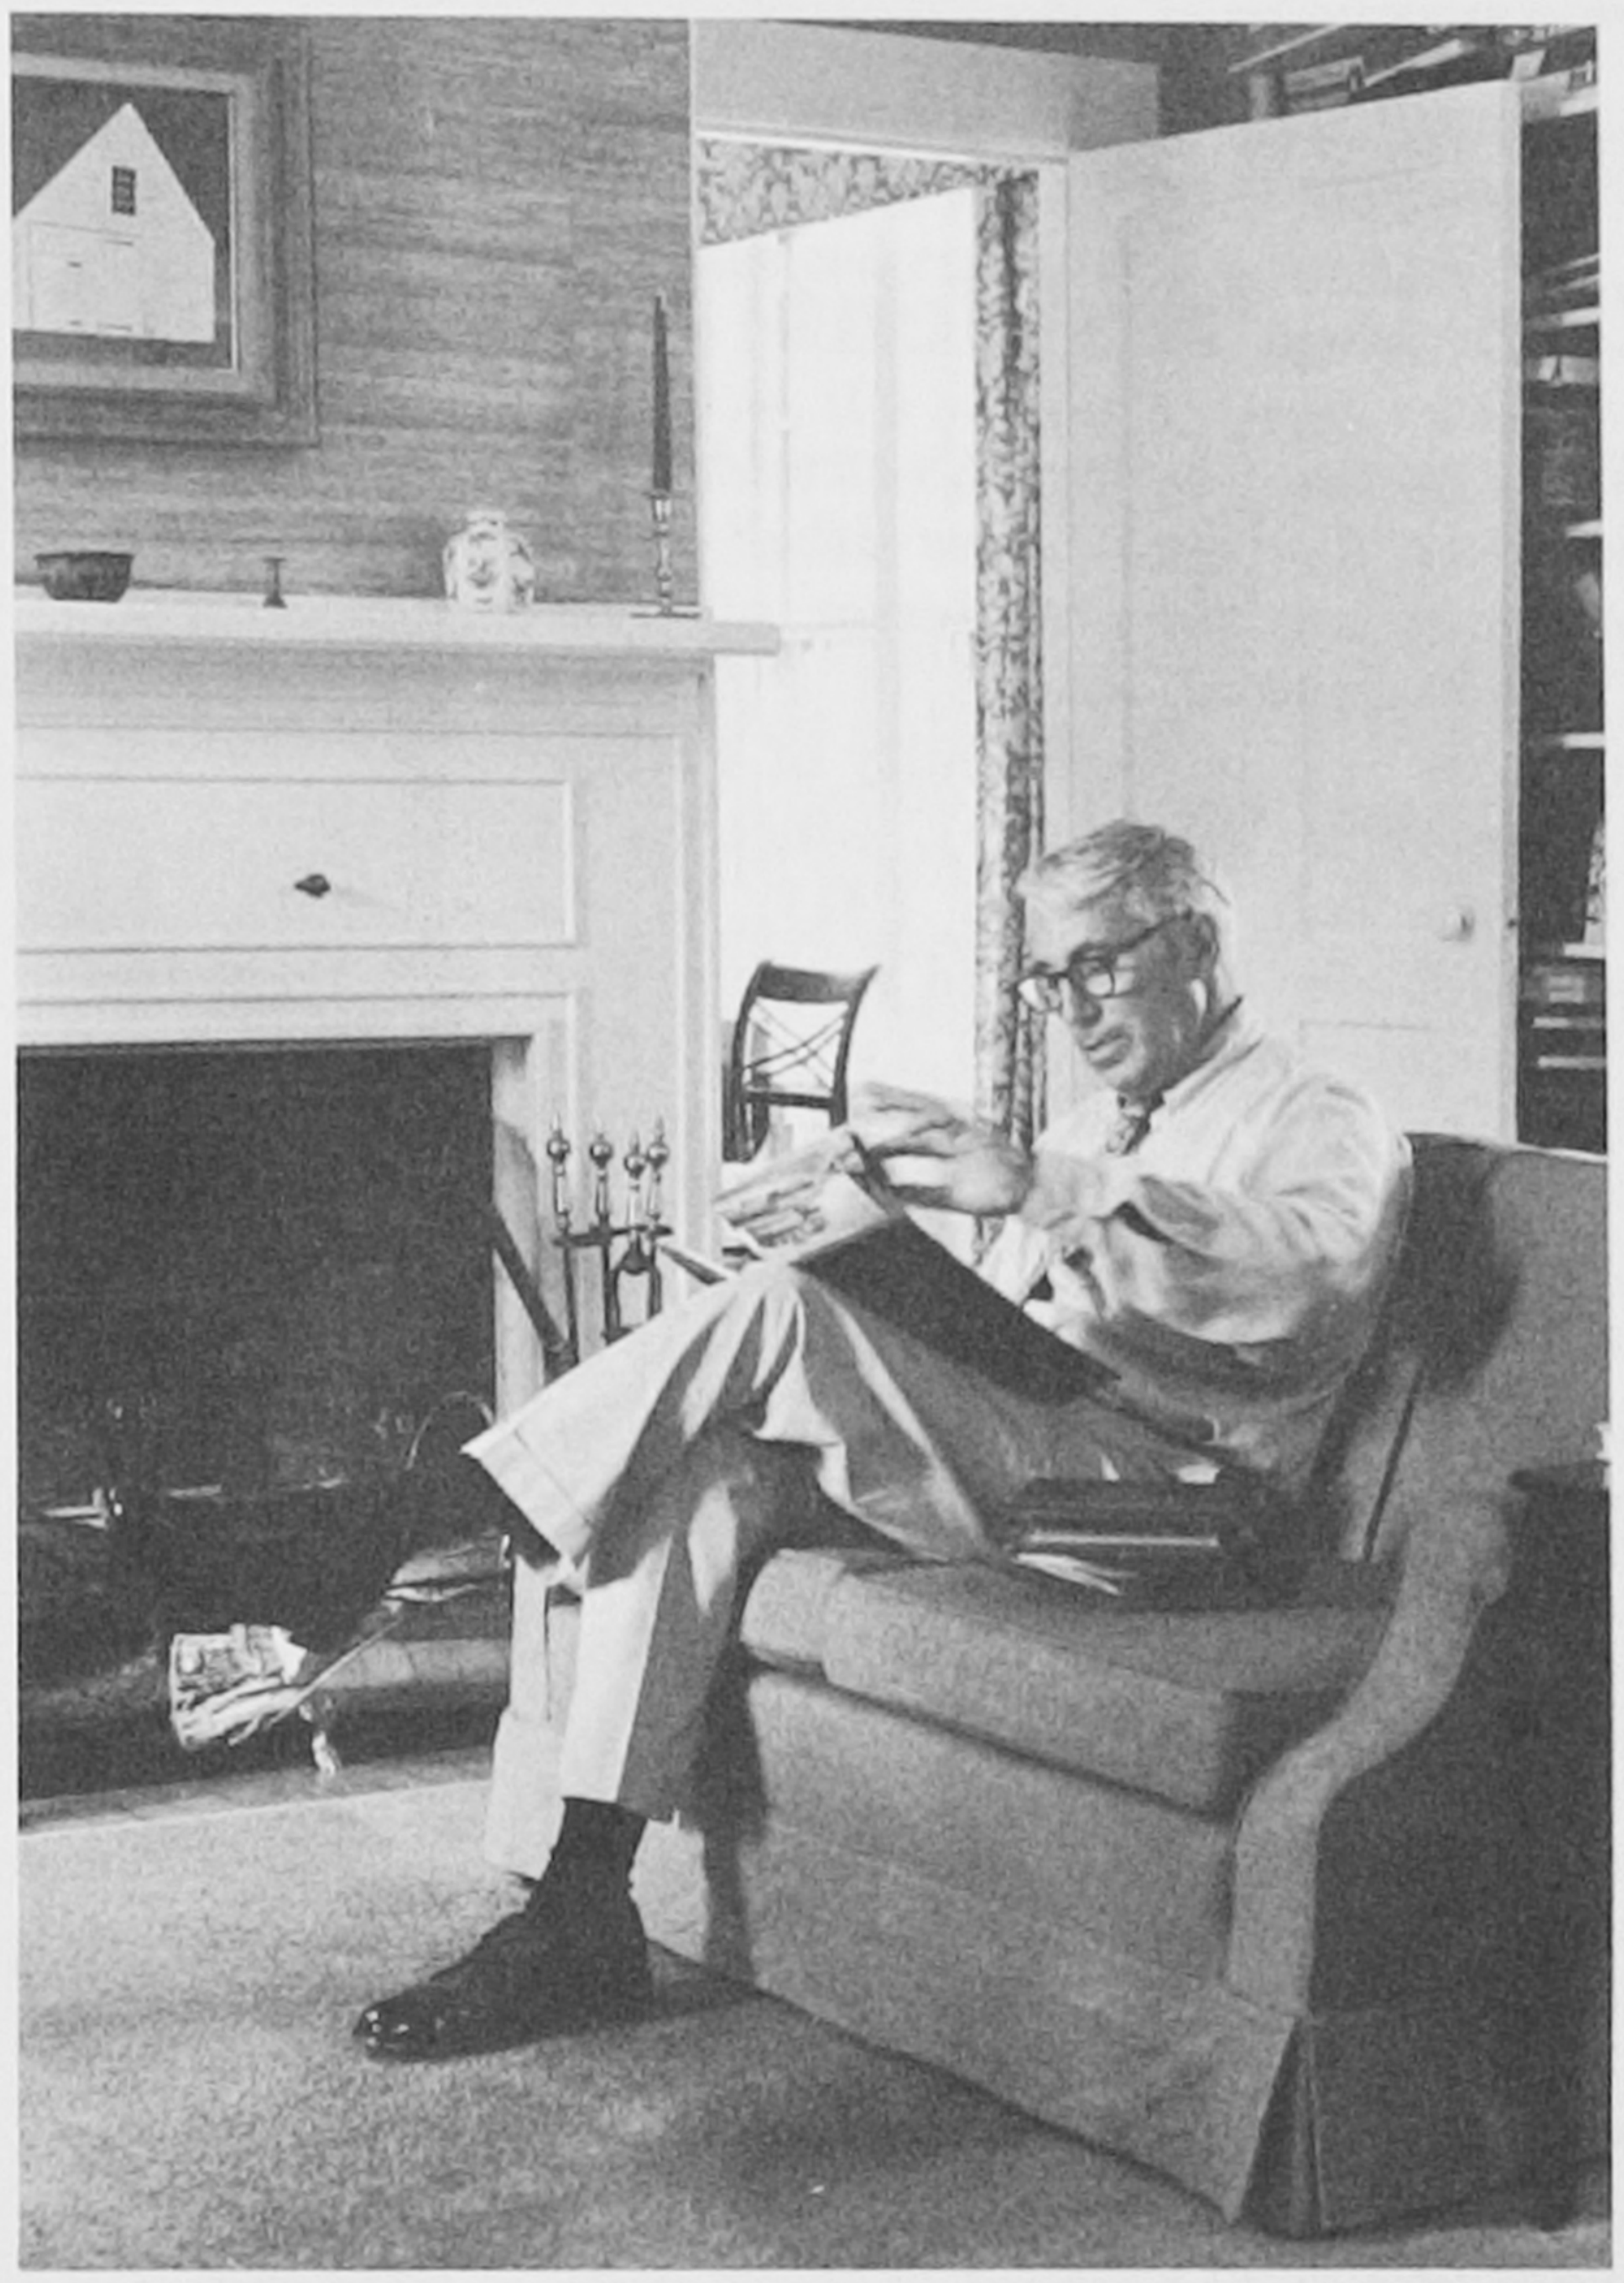
When asked recently which accomplishments of his first ten years, here, now give him the greatest satisfaction, the President replied, "Probably my principal satisfaction has not to do with any quantitative factors at all; it has to do with a goal I had in mind when I came here and which, I think, in some measure I've been able to achieve; and that was to try to attract people who were good teacher-scholars to this institution . . . people who I thought had very considerable ability—and I can name some of them, you know who they are. This was my greatest satisfaction. It was in the earlier years—in the years from '63, say, to '66-'67, when I was just beginning, trying to assemble both good administrators and first-rate faculty; and at that time the president was a principal recruiter; as people were brought here, either I initiated a name or invited someone to come and I always saw them. So that I had a first-hand, live contact with what was developing in the institution, the people who were coming to it; I knew them."

"When I first came here," notes a senior professor, "Middlebury was a good, second-rate college; Armstrong has tried to make it a first-rate college with second-rate resources. He's pushed steadily for tougher administrators and tougher departments —meaning that they hold themselves to higher standards of scholarship. The Faculty today is brighter by far than ten years ago; they're better scholars and more challenging teachers. But they're also more career-oriented, less institution-oriented: while there's more intellectual rigor, there's less interest in forming a collegial community with the students."

Another professor comments, "Armstrong is much more concerned with good teaching, and what's going on in the classroom—lectures, the quality of the College—than Stratton was. Stratton was a good administrator and was brought in during difficult times to restore the College to health. And we made great strides during his term. But he had to run a pretty tight show. On the other hand, he stayed 'out front'—was more accessible to faculty—than Armstrong has become in later years. Armstrong has delegated far more responsibility to his deans and vice presidents."

A third observed, "The qualitative changes have been mainly in style and in declared aspirations. Armstrong has charged the teaching faculty with establishing and sustaining a continuity of excellence.





In quiet of President's home on South Main, Dr. Armstrong works in his library study, often relaxing with music before dinner. This home of Middlebury presidents since 1918 had been residence of chemistry professor Henry M. Seely since 1870.

really rewarded in any substantial way. Now, although we're not a 'publish-or-perish' institution, it's certainly encouraged; we have grant funds; we didn't even have anything that could be called a leave program, previous to President Armstrong; we do now. If a young man is going to engage in research that's going to involve travel or expense during the summer, funds are available to him. When he comes up for reappointment or promotion or tenure, this certainly weighs heavily.

"Then also, being able to compete with almost any other institution for your young men, you look at them very carefully. You want to see some promise along this line before you're really interested in this person as a candidate. I think this is very important. I think that a teacher, particularly in an institution of this sort where we're sort of removed, away from the large libraries and real centers of research and learning, a man almost for his own self-respect has to have two audiences: he has to have an audience of his students but he also has to have an audience of his peers. (You could go in and you could teach these students anything, so long as you put on a good show; they'd accept it by and large.) So I think that the College needs to be satisfied, and you need to satisfy yourself, that you're far enough along in your own field that you have something to say that people in the field are going to be sufficiently interested in to want to read. Whether it's reviews in a journal, or articles, or a book, or a paper at a meeting or something of this sort and oh, there's a lot of that here now! Ten or twelve years ago it was rather the exception."

Nearly every professor interviewed commented on the tenure situation, which all agreed was a national, not just a local problem. Thus one department chairman:

"The greater involvement of the Faculty in their professional work has altered the character of the College. It's hard to say whether on balance it's better or worse, but it's clearly different. Under the Stratton administration, a man was hired to teach. Period. Now he's hired with the expectation that he will not only teach but will also get involved in scholarly activity. Armstrong has made it clear that he wants scholars as well as teachers. He also knows that published papers aren't the only evidences of scholarship —that it's perfectly possible to be a genuine scholar in your field and never publish a thing! Simply by to expend more energy on their own careers.

"But the increasing dynamism has resulted from the growth of the Faculty and the skillful recruiting—from a wider field—of good new men—particularly after Cubeta became Dean of the Faculty.

"Nevertheless I think our Faculty today is even more concerned with how they teach—their effectiveness in the classroom. There's lots of discussion among teachers about this—informally. 'Is the term paper really necessary in this course?' 'Is an oral exam better than a written exam?' Some professors are trying a half-oral, half-written exam in their courses. So there's real concern shown for educational effectiveness. An increased awareness and concern by students has caused us to do some things that they find helpful."

"The Faculty today is more willing to let their students establish their own learning pathways, than we used to. They like their kids to work more freely, more independently. There's much less imposed structure in classwork, today."

"Teaching conditions today are distinctly better. We used to teach an average of four courses per semester; now the average is three courses. Also, the Library has improved immeasurably.

"Obviously, our Faculty, now, is much more professional than it once was. That is, there's a greater sense of commitment to scholarship, instead of simply to the classroom. There's much more research capability, today, and because of the tenure situation, nationwide, all of our younger men recognize that their futures don't lie at Middlebury. So for both reasons there's a lot more publication, today, than ten or 15 years ago. But that 'publish or perish' shibboleth is a lot of nonsense—at least here; most people who publish do so not because of pressure from their chairman, but because they think they have something interesting and useful to say! And we could certainly point to members of our faculty who are very highly regarded, here at Middlebury, who have actually published very little. Promotion or preferment doesn't depend on publication."

"Departmental life has become a good deal more democratic, than it was under Stratton. The head of a department really could run a department, then, pretty much the way he wanted to. Now, it seems to me, the departments are more democratically organized, more democratically run, so that people within the department have a little more to say about what's going on. In terms of responsibility to the President, I have the feeling that to a certain extent the department head under Stratton, was left to run his own show, pretty much. The Dean of the Faculty then was not as strong a position as it is now. Nor was there an Academic Vice President. So there was probably greater autonomy for departmental chairmen, then, than there is now.

"Teaching loads are lighter than they were; when I first came here the load was 12 hours. Now I only teach six.

"I think there is a good deal less camaraderie among the Faculty, today; in part because the Faculty is a lot larger than it was ten years ago. I think, too, that there probably has been more turnover. Right now, I think there's a kind of a break between older faculty—the tenured faculty—and the younger faculty. Clearly this problem of tenure structure is making for a lack of ease among faculty members. But I think there is the feeling that 'You guys are part of the Establishment because of your tenure; we're just here.' It's kind of a tragic situation. This certainly puts a great amount of pressure on the younger men to get some research done to make themselves marketable to the outside."

But another professor spoke with enthusiasm of the advantages of a research-oriented Faculty:

"With salaries now being comparable with other institutions, our geographical location is one of our greatest assets now. Oh, my goodness, the people who would sell their souls to get out of Columbia or NYU or the University of Chicago and get into this kind of atmosphere, knowing that we have students fully as good as, if not better than, the students that they have! We can really compete with the best institutions in this country and the result is that we have a lively, excellent Faculty. I wouldn't trade the two young men in my department for any two young men that I know of; I just think they're tops! They're fine teachers; and they're already in the process of becoming distinguished scholars. Each is going to have a book published this year, and I predict that their books are going to be well-received and recognized as important books. They get along beautifully with the students. One has already turned down an offer from another institution. Well, this is what you want!

"And even though I have regrets about some things, I think that in terms of intellectual liveliness, overall competence, and the reputation of this institution on the basis of articles and books and reviews that are in the process of being published, oh, we're so far ahead of what we were ten years ago that it's hard to remember!

"Not that the Faculty wasn't doing effective work ten years ago; but we were terrifically over-burdened; we didn't have the time, the strength, the energy really to do too much independent scholarship. Not only that, although the College was very pleased to have books and articles appearing, they didn't pay much attention. It wasn't something that was

Gardening, putting my hands in the soil, working the soil, I find very salutary, and putting seeds in the ground with the hope that they always bring; when you plant seeds, you're planting hope and then you've got something to nurture. I don't know, I just resonate to it.

"Then there's another part of me that I guess is in most human beings—that's the response to the sea. I find the sea a very stirring experience when I'm near it; I enjoy going to it and that's part of why I go to Maine, because we're close to the sea. I'm not going to quote any of the fine poetry, you know, about 'going down to the sea' but we come out of the sea—there's some kind of affinity!

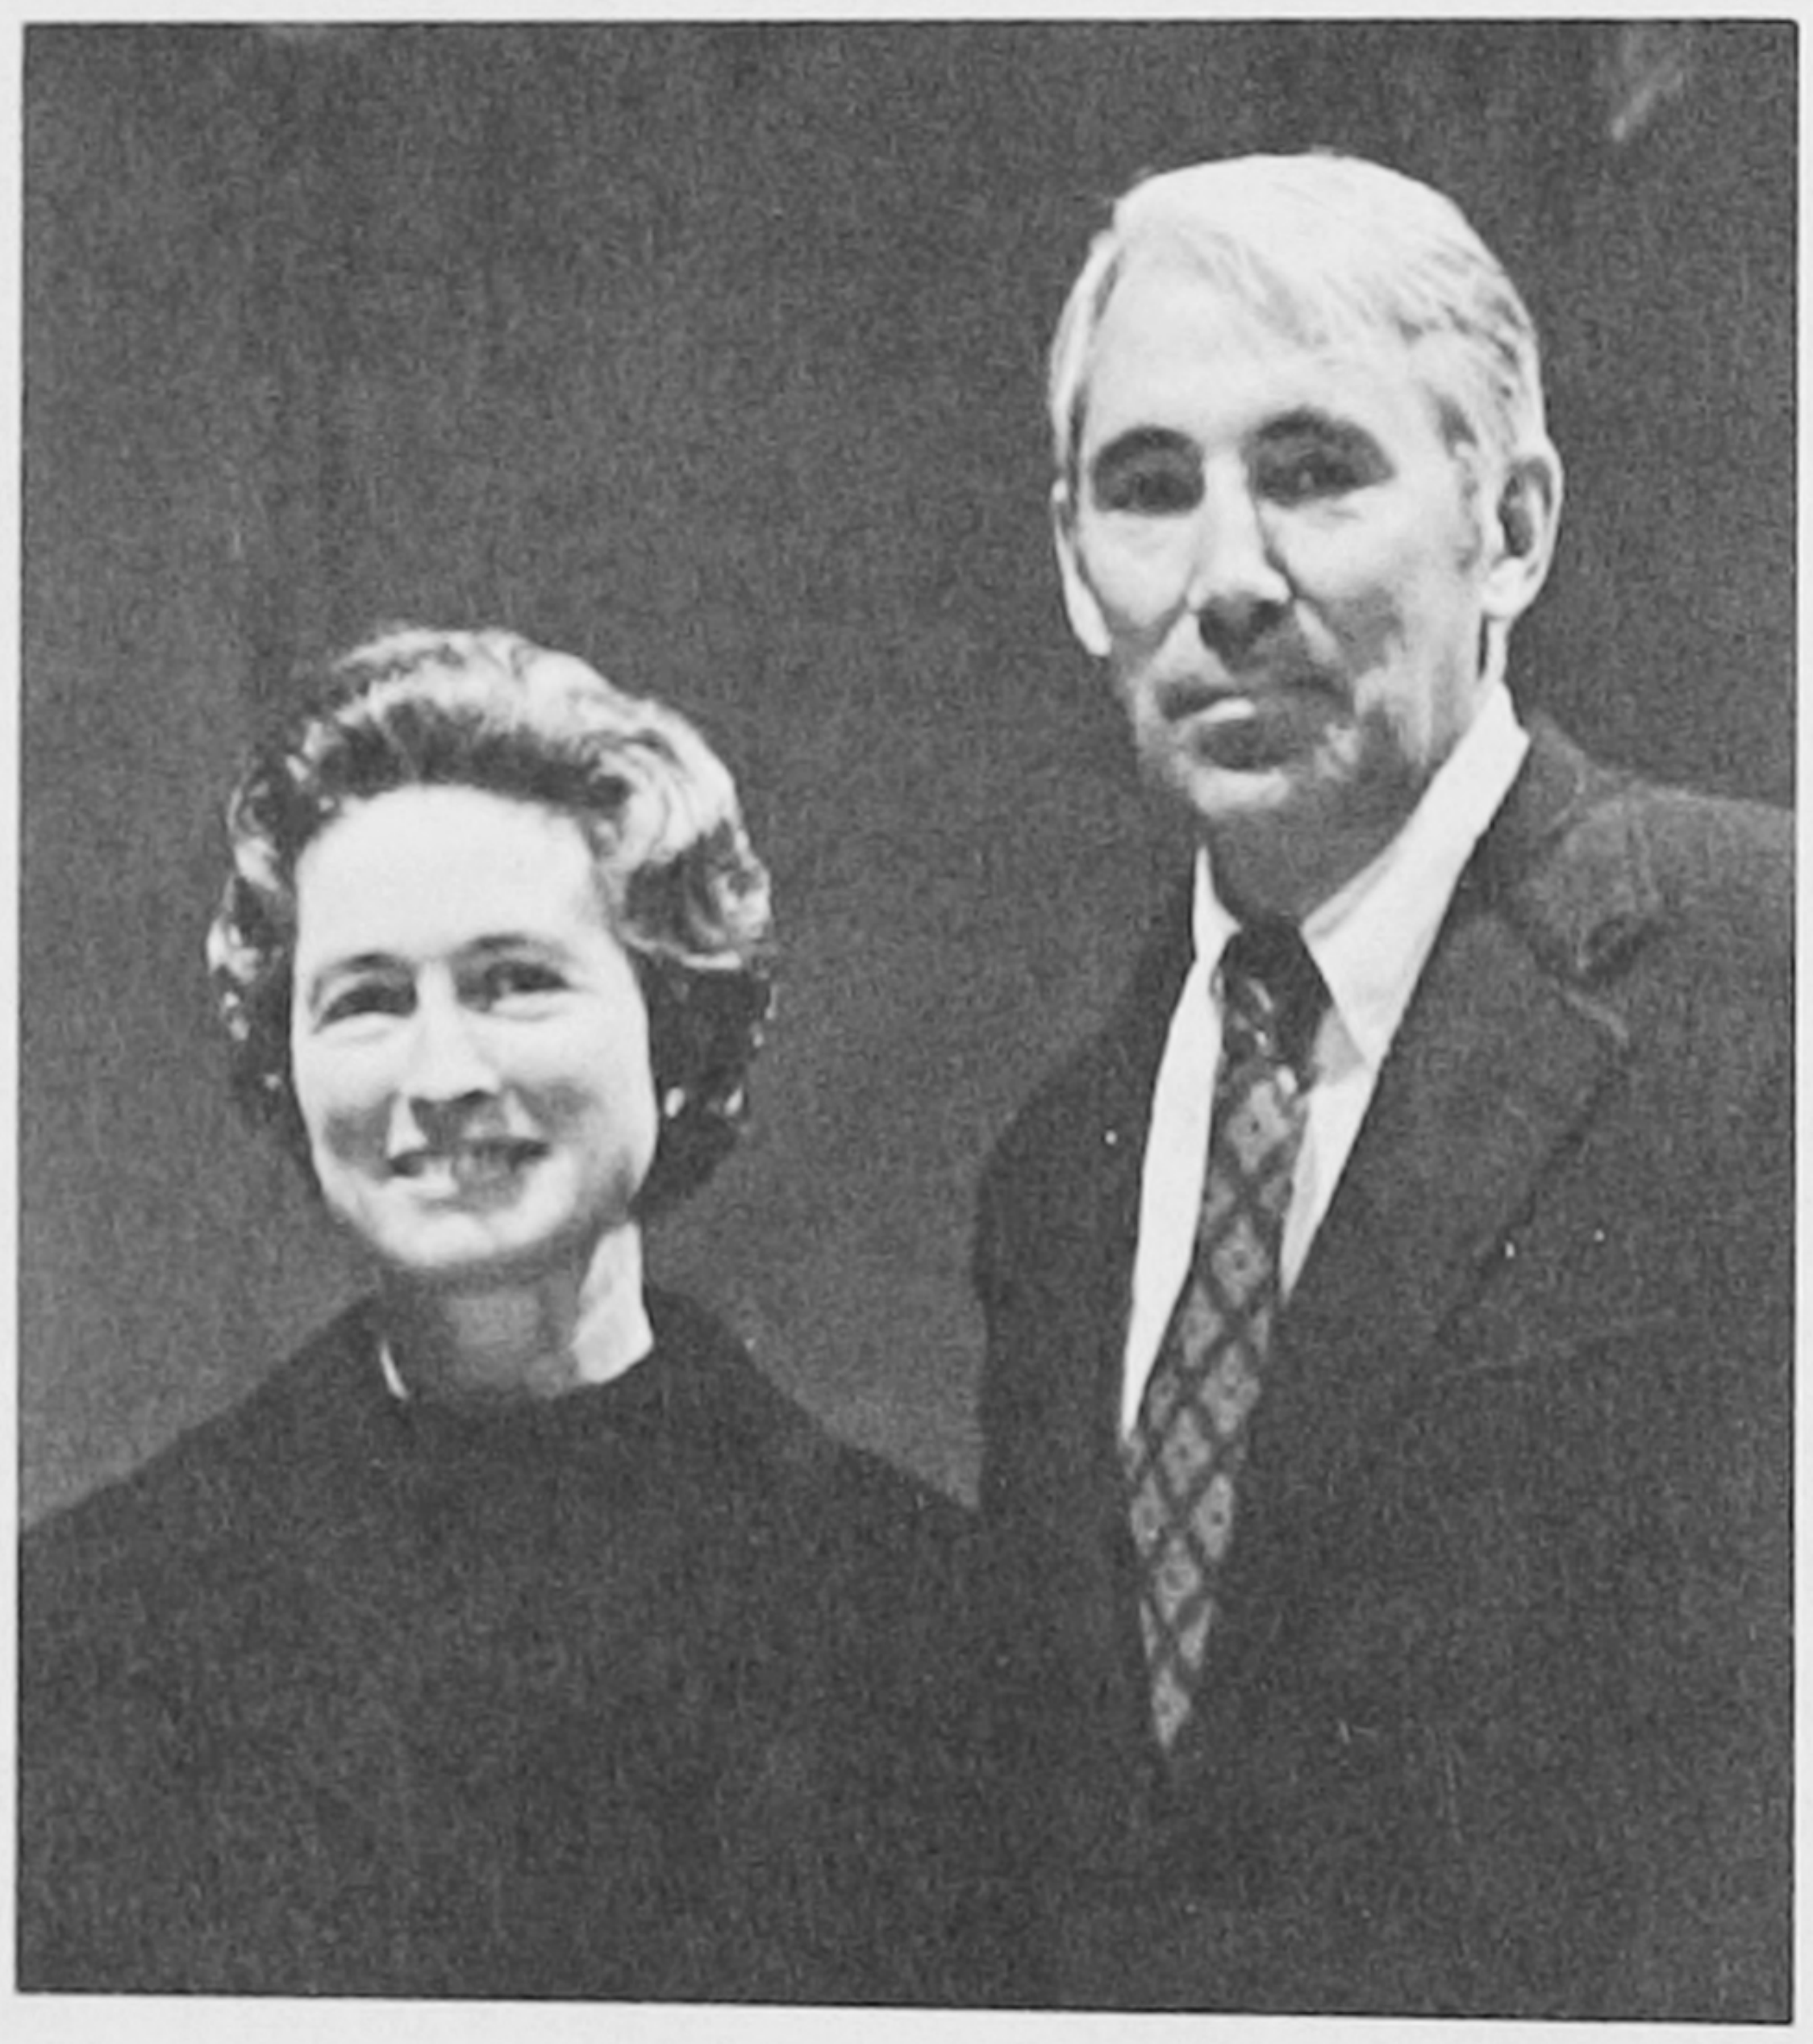
"So gardening or farming, that is working on my farm in Maine and working with my hands, I find a very renewing kind of change from what I do all day long, which is reading and writing and talking. And I find I can think better in the garden. And the sea, which I like very much, and bicycling, and surely you know about music in the Armstrong family. Although I, myself, am limited to the recorder and only an unpracticed recorder player at that, music in the Armstrong household is all the time, it's part of our life. I enjoy my children; I enjoy the prospect of being a grandfather very shortly—momentarily!

"I don't know whether I've given you any sense of the fun of it—the people! When I get up in the morning, I look forward to what I'm going to do—with some rare exceptions; I don't look forward to certain sorts of interviews that are inevitable when you're the chief executive officer. But I really look forward to coming up on the hill to work with the people I'm with. I like them; I enjoy them; they're very different; certainly the principal officers are very different. I like the engagement of trying to represent the College well; I like to get a grant; I like to persuade somebody to do something; I like to think I've used 'right persuasion.' "

"This, of course, is part of the fun of it. To learn the differences among and between the people and the organizations that you deal with. One of my enjoyments and also one of my heavy responsibilities is to try to fit people's talents to the jobs. Not simply to follow the kind of orderly structure which makes sense in a logical way, but to see if you can't take this person who obviously has these sorts of talents and harness them in such a way that the person works well with those around him. It takes patience and time to know your people and to discover how you can best utilize talents. I find that interesting. (Sometimes I'm more successful than other times.)

"I look forward to my work; I enjoy it. I do need moments of withdrawal, to get a kind of perspective on it, and I do need to school myself to take some time with my family—which is what I have just finished doing. I've just come from ten days, and I could sit over there in Maine with my Puritan and Presbyterian background—I used to stew and say, Gosh, I really ought to be back there, and my wife, God bless her, will say 'You know you aren't that important. You act as though the College wasn't going to go on. It will.' So there is that need for a withdrawal; very much so, because the presidency is a very intense and all-consuming kind of an activity—but I enjoy it. I really do."

The Man Who is President



When elected the twelfth president of Middlebury College, James Isbell Armstrong was associate professor of Classics at Princeton. Raised in Princeton (his father was on the faculty of Princeton Theological Seminary), educated at Taft ('37) and Princeton ('41), he entered the Army in 1941 and was married the following year to Carol Aymar. After leaving the Service in 1946, he returned to Princeton for graduate work, and received his doctorate in Classics in 1949. Then 30 years old, he taught a year at Indiana and another year at Princeton before being recalled to Army duty during the Korean War. In 1952 he returned to Princeton where he taught for the next 11 years, with a year out in '55-'56 as a fellow at the American Academy in Rome. At 39 Dr. Armstrong was named associate dean of the graduate school and two years later associate professor of Classics.

We asked him, this summer, why he became a Classics scholar, what he did in his spare time, and what personal satisfactions he had found in running a college:

A. "I think that the Classics interest comes out of the wisdom of my father. Perhaps a way of saying it is that my father was a professor of New Testament Greek, and I admired him, and he could read Greek and Latin. I learned to read Latin as most young men did—when I was going through school; and I went to a school that had a British background: you started Latin at age 7 —so I got so that I could read Latin with some degree of ease and the New Testament Latin—the Vulgate—was simple. So my father gave me a Nestle's text which has the Greek on one side and the Latin on the other. He would read the Greek, and I would read the Latin. It always kind of piqued me, you know, that he could read the Greek and I could only read the Latin! So having gone on to read a lot of Latin and having a fairly good command of it as a young person, I wanted to read Greek and once I discovered what was in Greek literature there was no way except to go ahead and find out more about it!

"You can see how one interested in value considerations might find a source of great stimulation and enlightenment in Greek literature—when you think of the Greek tragedians, of Homer and Plato and Aristotle and that enormously funny man, Aristophanes, you've got a body of material . . . (Contrary to Dick Turner's feeling that things have been better said and more richly said in modern times; I challenge him to show me a historian who writes with greater perception and more accuracy about the human situation than Thucydides: Herodotus is a great storyteller but Thucydides is a historian, a great historian.)"

Q. Now the second question: other than flying, what now are your principal avocations?

A. "Why say 'other than flying'? That's where I get a whole lot of recreation! I began flying here, and I began skiing here. I would say probably my recreation is in sports—it was when I was a younger man and still continues to be—and in gardening. I enjoy gardening very much.

reading extensively and keeping up with the progress in your field.

"The Faculty is far less relaxed today than ten years ago! In those days if a man did his job and kept his hands clean he could expect to always have his job at Middlebury—even though he wouldn't get tenure until he made full professor. So there was a considerable sense of job security even though very few had tenure. Then in the early '60s the Faculty passed its 'up-or-out-in-seven' policy—to put Middlebury in step with the AAUP's national policy recommendations. So now, after seven years in teaching, a man must either be promoted to associate professor (and tenured) or else discharged. Since College policy is to try not to tenure more than 50% of the teachers in any department, this means that (assuming the department chairman does a good job of recruiting) there will be a steady flow of good younger men through every department—some of them obviously superior to certain tenured members of the department. We have a young man in our department, right now, who in my opinion is the finest teacher and scholar in this College—a superb and exciting teacher, a first-rate researcher, and an inspiring model to his students! He's on a two-year contract and because ⅔rds of the department is already tenured, there is absolutely no chance we can keep him.

"But there are five or six such 'gems' on the Faculty, now, and the President has heard the pleadings for each of them by his department chairmen; his position is, in a nutshell, 'It's too bad, of course, to have to give up such a fine man but we have to assume there will always be 'gems' coming along. If we start making exceptions to our policy, the entire policy breaks down and we'll have no policy.' And although I hate to admit it, I think he's right.

"The 'up-or-out-in-seven' rule does have the effect of making the College take a decision on its faculty members. If you let a man stay on for ten or 12 years and then find he's not pulling his weight, it's awfully tough to fire him. He's been here too long. And when it's tough to do something, it often doesn't get done. If you have to let a man go, it's better if he's only been out of graduate school seven years, than 15."

THE VIEW FROM OLD CHAPEL

After ten years in the President's office, Dr. Armstrong was asked recently about some of the problems and pleasures of the job. We present a few excerpts from his replies:

"In my administration the Board of Trustees of Middlebury College has delegated the executive authority to this office. The essential problem is to utilize the authority in such a way that you recognize the freedoms of other people. It's a very delicate business to lead; there is a responsibility as a leader to recognize the initiatives of others and to encourage those initiatives. So that you keep a balance—you try to exercise a kind of authority which is creative authority, as distinguished from authoritarianism. It's always a difficult balance and it's the challenge and it's the fun and stimulation of the job.

"Of course every college president plays a different role for each constituency, and there are at least five constituencies, maybe six: there is the student body and there is the Faculty, and then there is the administrative staff, and Trustees, and our alumni, and the public. They all have different kinds of expectations, but you're really doing, it seems to me, three different things: you're trying to lead, to manage, and to represent the institution well.

"Now this doesn't mean that you puff it; I think perhaps the hardest thing for a president is to be sure that he speaks truly and honestly: he wants to represent his institution well, he wants to put the best foot forward, but there's always the temptation not to tell the other side of the story, and any human organization has its weaknesses. So to represent well is to represent honestly and authentically and that's a very, very heavy responsibility. It's not an easy one, but it's kind of fun to try to do it.

New Hampshire. For several years he was a reporter for the Providence Journal, then editor and publisher of the Colebrook News and Gazette before joining the Boston Globe in 1963. His financial writing at The Globe brought him recognition for its clarity and insight. In 1966 he left The Globe and worked as a freelance photographer and writer in Vietnam for a year. Recently he had been a freelance writer associated with The Globe. Survivors are his mother, a son, Benjamin, and a daughter, Felicia.

1960 Ruth Brown Salisbury (Mrs. William), 35, died July 6 in Syracuse. Before her marriage she was publications editor for the Council of Advancement of Small Colleges in Washington, D.C. At the time of her death she was employed at Syracuse University. Survivors, besides her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Brown (Catherine Pickard '30), are her husband, a daughter, Catherine, a son, David, two brothers, and two sisters.

Philadelphia Benefit Nets Another $700 for Scholarship Fund

Left, benefit workers Jane Miller Sullivan '49, Nancy Wright Reuther '54, Irmgard Nierhaus Stebbins '48, Nancy Thomsen Rand '52, and Ann Heath Fay '54.

The Middlebury Alumnae Club of Philadelphia has presented the College with a check for $700 for the Scholarship Fund. Three performances of Mowgli, Boy of the Jungle, were staged by the Niccolo Marionettes of New York on March 3, in Media, Pa., before hundreds of delighted area children. Added attraction Michael Willis '70, entertained between shows with his guitar and songs. As husbands and children acted as ushers and stagehands, alumnae took tickets and welcomed children, Scout leaders, and parents, who were greeted at the entrance by a colorful sign designed and painted by Caryl Entwhistle Huffaker '52. Richard Reuther, husband of benefit-chairman Nan Wright Reuther '54, recorded the occasion with his camera.

Mrs. Donald Taylor (Janet Brouse '59), is already making plans for the 1974 benefit, including January-morning workshops on posters and tickets, and mid-winter socializing as well. Philadelphia alumnae agree that the marionette show has provided both fun and satisfaction in a job well-done, and hope that more area graduates will join them in presenting the Niccolo Marionettes next March.

Varied activities of the Philadelphia Club this year have included a talk by Planned-Parenthood worker Elaine Sanders '58; luncheon and a tour of the Vassar Club's "Designers' Show House"; the annual "Blueberry Picnic" at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Huffaker (Caryl Entwhistle '52); a coed picnic for freshmen and upper classmen at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Moore (Martha Johnson '57); and the annual dinner and get-together in September.

Officers for the coming year are: president, Adrienne Littlewood Delaney '57; 1st vice-president, Janet Brouse Taylor '59; 2nd vice-president, Nan Wright Reuther '54; secretary and membership, Kay Shook Balabon '59; treasurer, Sally Iliff Figgatt '51; and publicity, Juliet Carrington Reed '48.

Deaths

1915 Ruth M. Bartley, 80, died June 30 in Ashuelot, N.H. She had taught in high schools in New Boston and Whitefield, N.H., and in Wellsville and Johnsville, N.Y. until 1922 when she joined the faculty of Woonsocket (R.I.) High School as an English teacher; she retired from teaching in 1962. Ruth had done graduate work at Rhode Island College of Education and at Brown. She is survived by a nephew, General Hugh Bartley.

1917 William A. Hawks, 78, died Aug. 8 in North Hampton, N.H., following a brief illness. He was a retired engineer, having worked for many years in New York City. More recently he was self-employed as a consulting engineer. During World War I he served as a Lieutenant in the field artillery for a year. William was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1917 Carley H. Paulsen, 81, died Aug. 2 in Wellesley, Mass. He attended Middlebury for three years, then transferred to MIT. He served in the Navy during both World Wars. After World War I he moved to Hingham, Mass. and became a real estate developer. In 1940 he was recalled to duty and was in charge of the maintenance of the Allied Invasion Fleet in England. Later he served with the Army of Occupation in Germany and worked with NATO, before retiring in 1951. Survivors are his wife, the former Helen Sibley '18, a son, David, and a daughter, Mrs. Patricia Darby. Carley was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

1918 William R. Brewster, 79, died June 29 in Maine. He had been a teacher at Burr and Burton Academy, Rollins College, and Country Day School, Newton, Mass. In 1921 he was named headmaster of Kimball Union Academy, a position he held until his retirement in 1952. He and his wife founded Birch Rock Camp at East Waterford, Me. in 1926, and have operated it continuously since. During World War I he served in the Air Force. Survivors are his wife, the former Leona Wright, and two sons, Dr. William Brewster, Jr. and Seward. William was a member of Alpha Sigma Phi.

1920 Ruth Cambridge Brinckerhoff (Mrs. Theodore), 76, died September 1 in Beacon, N.Y. Following her graduation she taught in Brandon, Vt. and Stroudsburg, Pa. until 1922. She married M. Smith Webb '18, in 1922 and they had a son, John. Mr. Webb died in 1964, and Ruth is survived by her second husband. She was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Kappa Kappa Gamma.

1922 Donald E. Homans, 75, died June 7. He was a graduate of Columbia and had done graduate work at Harvard. For 30 years he was a teacher and principal in the schools in Westboro, Mass. During World War II he served as a Lieutenant in the Navy and was at the invasion of Normandy. He is survived by his wife. Donald was a member of Delta Upsilon.

1925 Robert E. Parry, 72, died in June. He had worked for E. I. duPont de Nemours, Structural Slate Co., and the General Electric until 1931, when he became a research chemist with Johns-Manville. In 1960 he became manager of professional recruitment and training with Johns-Manville, a position he held until his retirement in the late '60s. In 1927 he married Helen Moore who survives him, as do two daughters, Ruth '52 (Mrs. John Cran) and Helen. Robert was a member of Delta Upsilon.

1925 Word has been received of the death of Isobel Sutherland Clark (Mrs. Edward) in July, 1971. Following graduation she taught in high schools in Worcester and Poughkeepsie (N.Y.) until 1939. From 1941 until her retirement in the '60s she was senior employment interviewer with the New York State Employment Service. In 1929 she married Mr. Clark and they had two sons, Edward and Charles. Isobel was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Alpha Xi Delta.

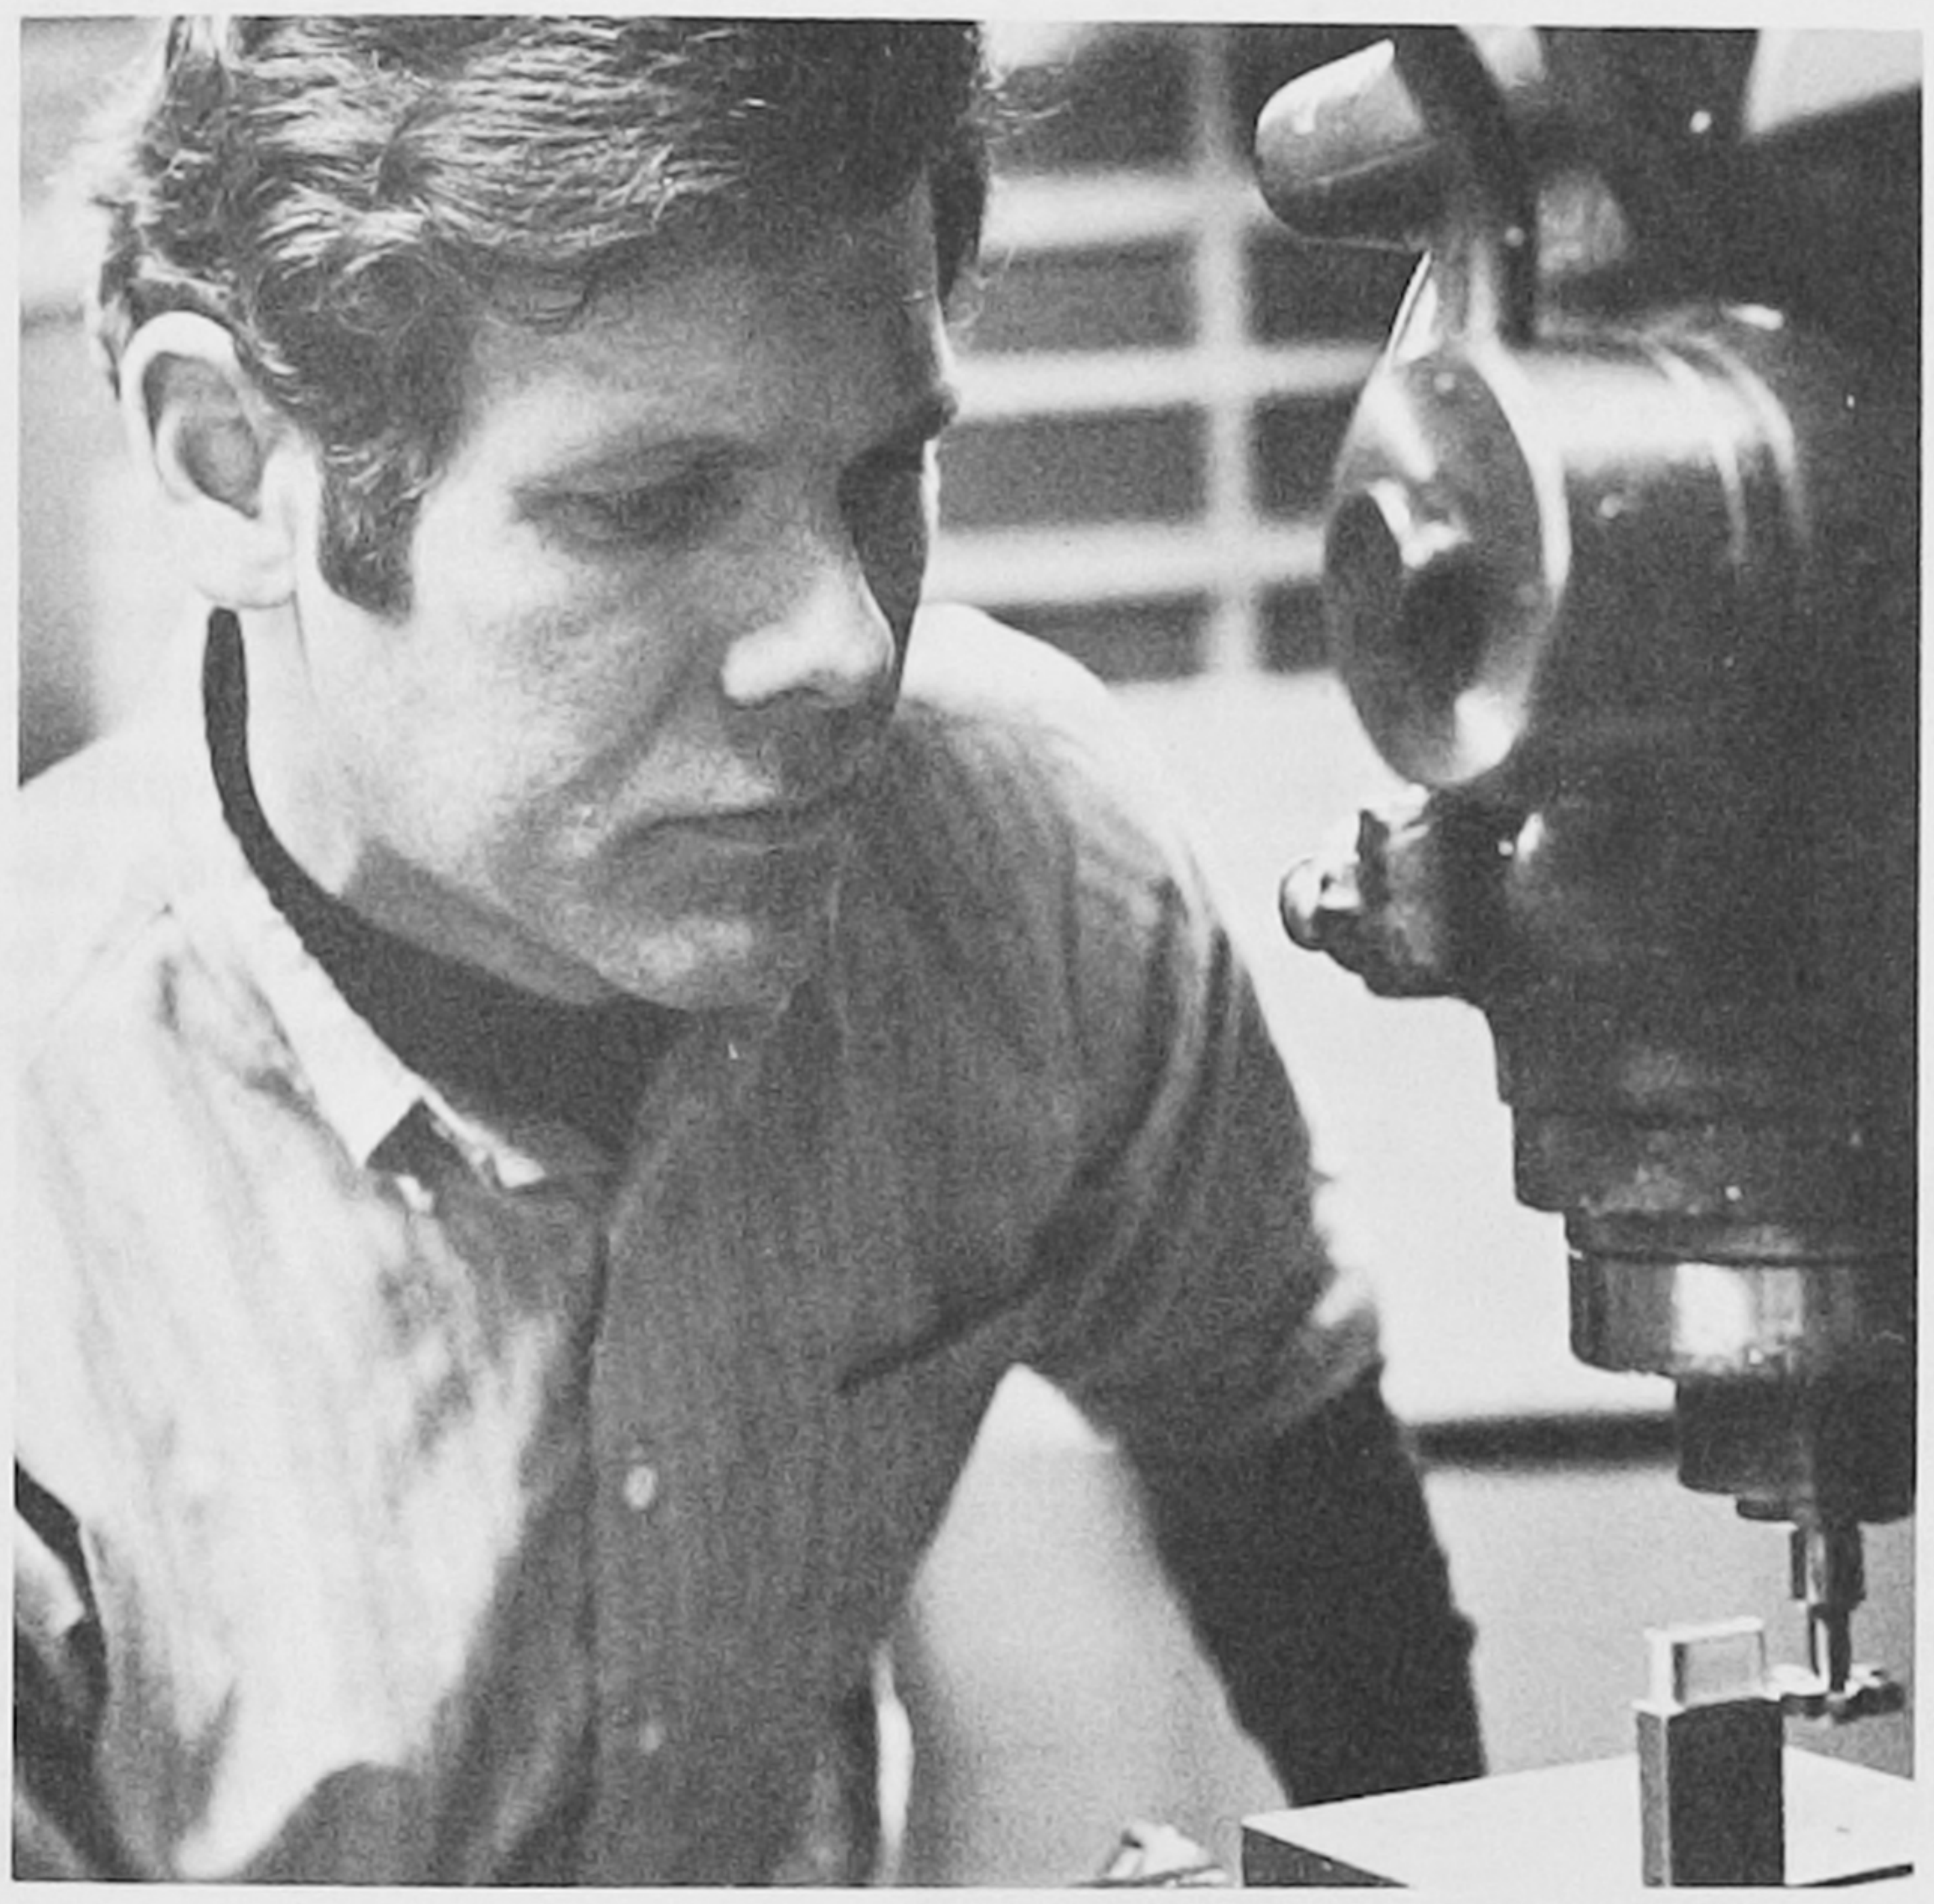
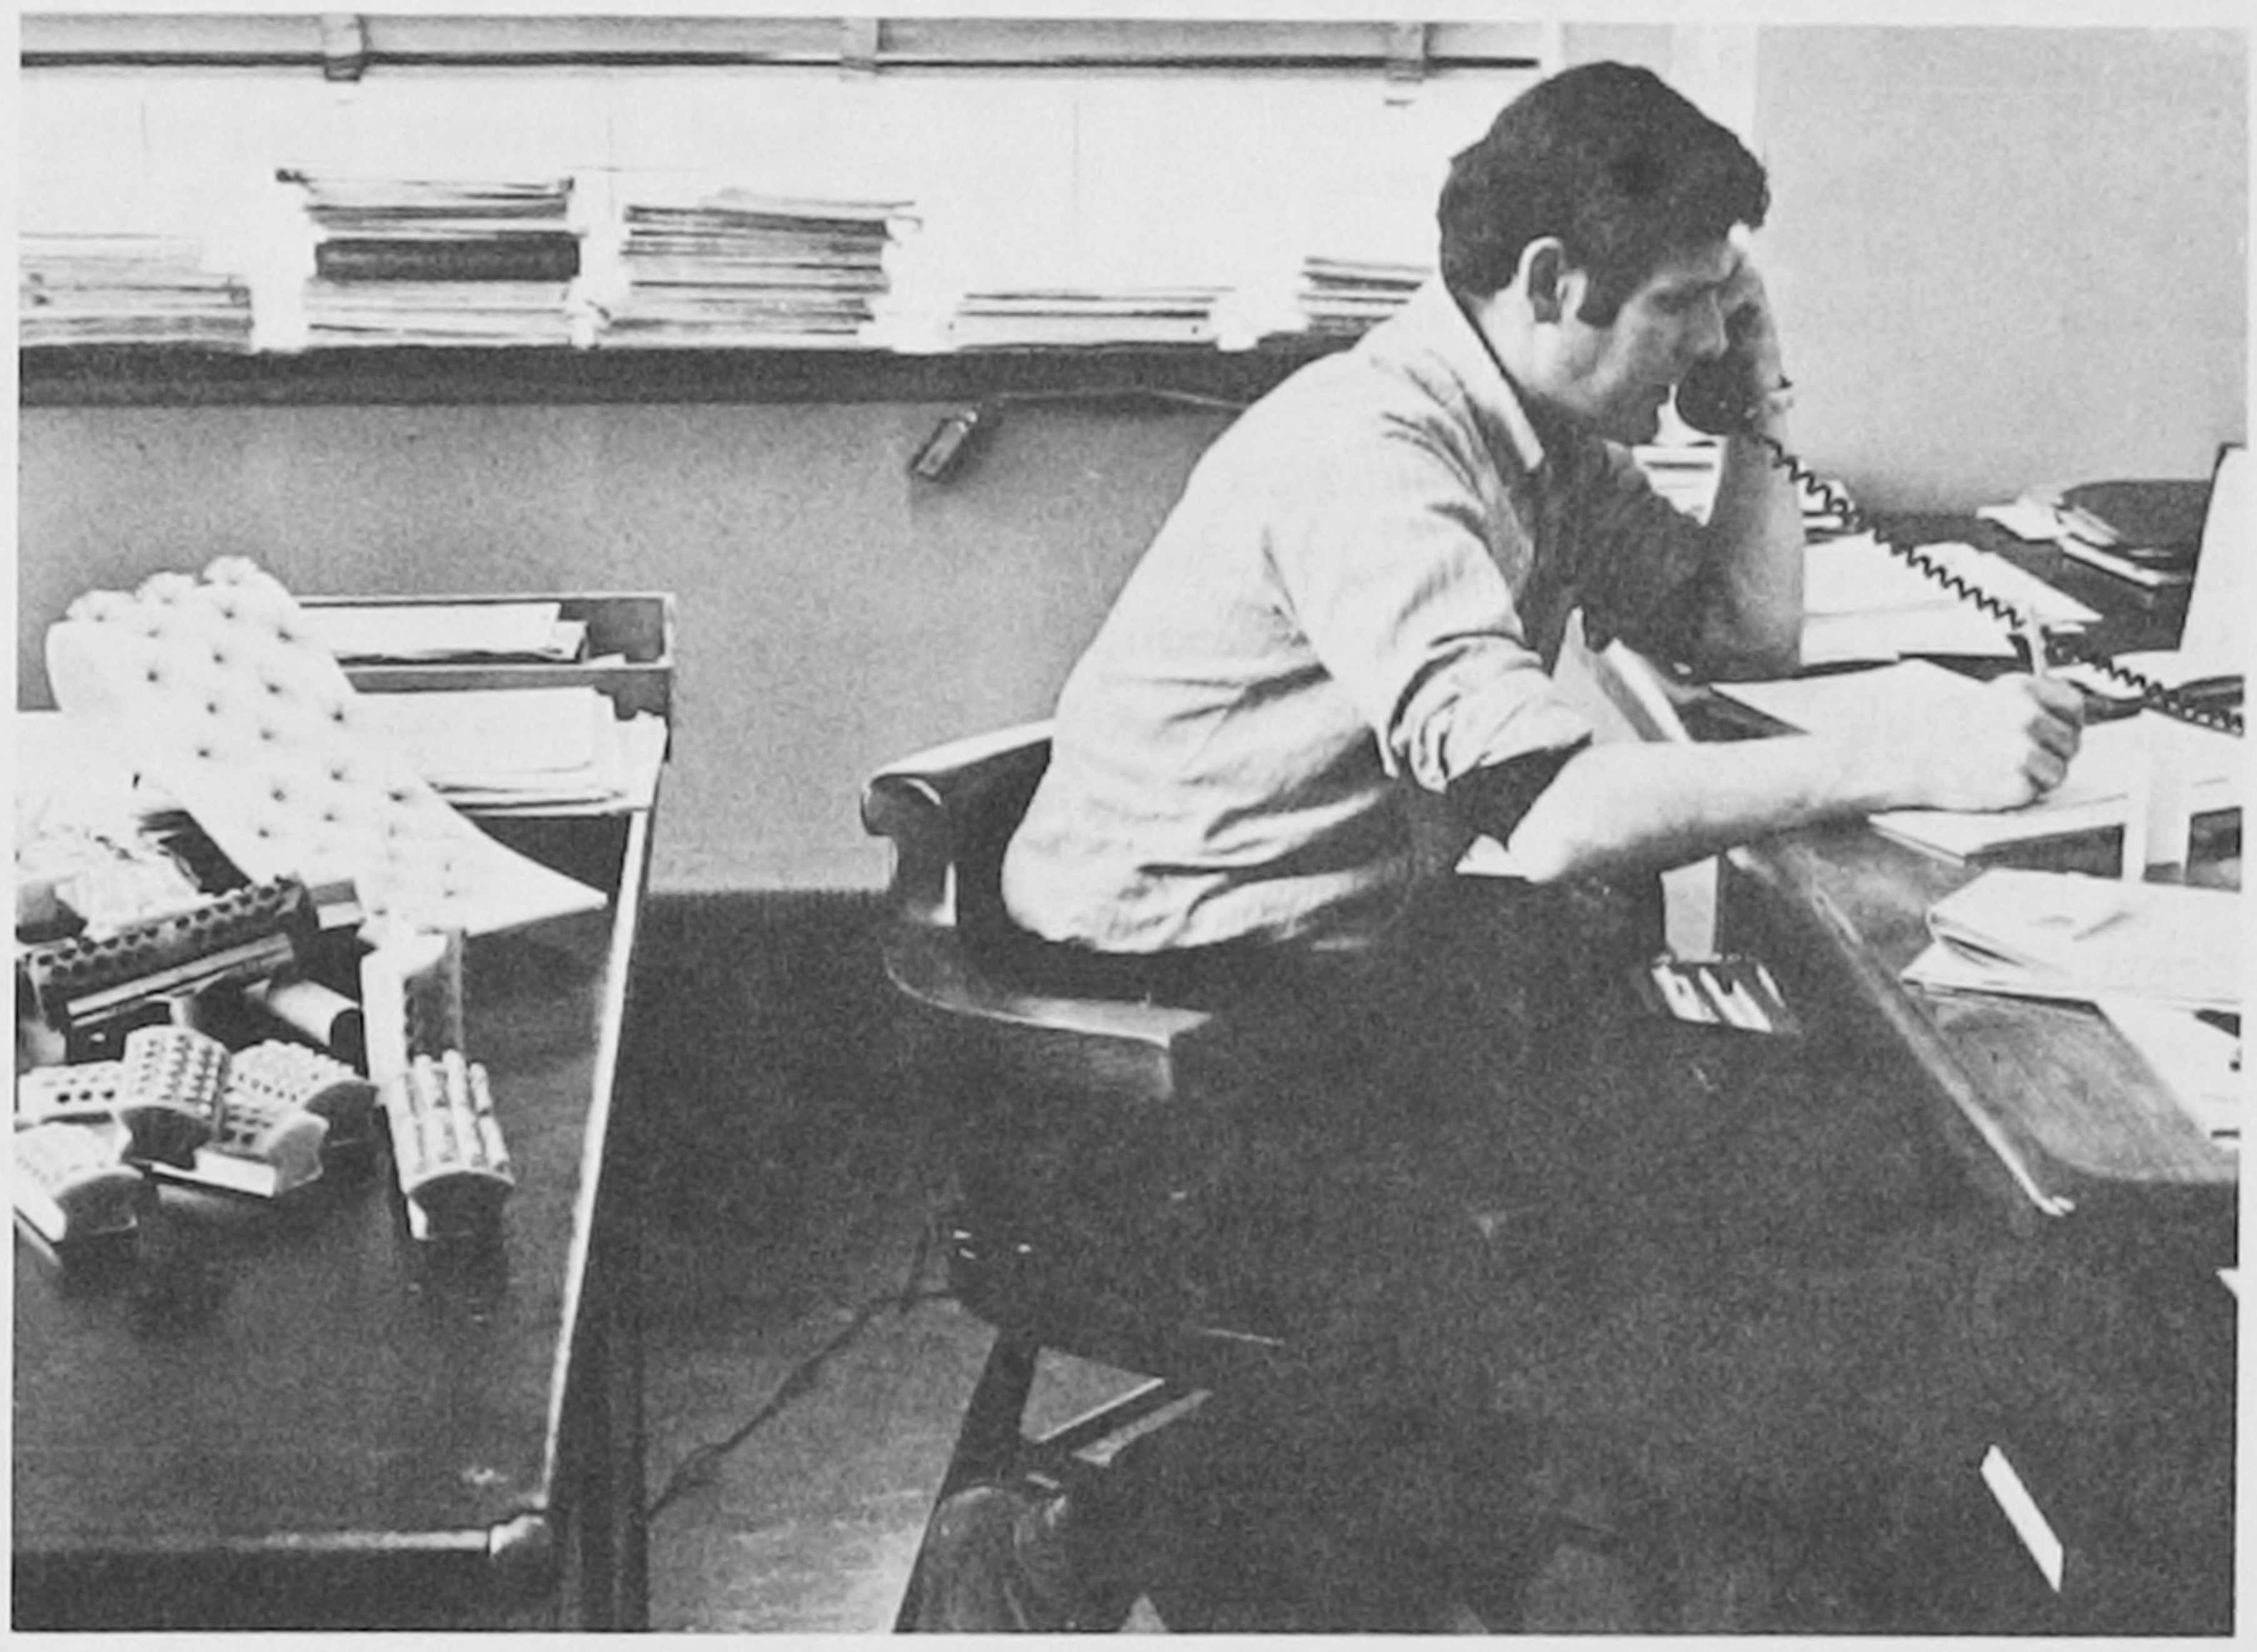
1925 Helen Miller Ingram (Mrs. H. C.), 69, died June 18 after a long illness. She had taught in high schools in Newport, N.H., Weston, Mass., and Guilford, Vt. and, from 1946 until her retirement in 1969, she had been an English teacher in Brattleboro (Vt.) High School. She had studied at the Sorbonne in France, Univ. of Vermont, Univ. of Massachusetts, and at Windham and Marlboro Colleges. Helen was a past president of the Vermont Chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma. 1955 John B. Value, 40, was killed on June 1 when his car skidded, crashed through guard rails, and plunged into Lake Gloriette at the Balsams in Dixville Notch in Trouble-shooting production, machining a new part, or taking orders, John Lewis wears all hats with the same commitment—to make every moment count. Above, automated set-up burns tuft holes, left, and a Tucel product array.





The bonding process involves the following simple steps: (1) Holes are burned into the flat, cleaning surface of a sponge; (2) Tubes of the same size as the holes are filled with tufts of fiber; (3) One end of each tuft is melted by brief contact with a hot mold; (4) The tufts are inserted, molten-end first, into the sponge holes; and (5) The molten ends "freeze" to the sponge, forming the dual-surface cleaning implement.

The surgical sponges are intended for only one-time use, but Tucel's tufted kitchen sponge has an expected lifespan of three to five months.

A feature of most Tucel products, according to Lewis, is their production from a minimum amount of raw material. From an environmental standpoint, the best Tucel product is a recyclable, all-polypropylene paint brush; traditional paint brushes, of course, are made of a wooden handle, a metal ferrule, glue to hold the brush in place, and a fourth material for the bristles. The Tucel paint brush uses one material, only. Lewis said he considers the impact of any new product upon the environment before selecting it for production. "I felt there was a need to make brushes a different way—faster, cheaper and, from an environmental standpoint, using fewer raw materials."

Skiing is one of several outdoor sports enjoyed by Lewis, his wife, Susan Lockwood '58, and their four children. "The little time I have, I spend at home," Lewis says, "or camping, skiing, or hiking. We use Vermont—that's one of the reasons I'm living here. I don't have to travel 200 miles to do what I want. I can walk out of my house. It's free."

Knowing the hours he spends at Tucel Industries, one wonders how much time John has to enjoy Vermont's recreational opportunities. Nonetheless, after three years, the joy of operating his own business hasn't diminished. And uses for Tucel products seem to be growing. For example, those fiber tufts are now used by a sporting goods company to cover the hooks on their fishing lures. "You just never know where this stuff is going to find its end use," Lewis says. ☐

Machine-designer, President, Supervisor, and Salesman, Inventor John Lewis '58 Cleans Up with Tufted Sponges

By Fred Stetson '65

Like other Middlebury grads before and after his time, John Lewis '58 has spent many cold winter evenings, shivering at the end of a stiff garden hose, spraying a new surface on a backyard ice rink.

These treacherous arenas were seldom used for skating; they were for slashing, howling hockey games, with boot-clad participants flailing away at tennis balls with taped-up sticks.

To the displeasure of the combatants, however, these exercises were sometimes interrupted by Vermont's fickle winter weather. Sigma Epsilon's "Madison Square Garden" of Monday night might well be slush and swamp water by Tuesday afternoon. This metamorphosis frustrated John so he invented a portable, artificial ice rink. It consists of panels that can be fitted together like squares of an oversized checkerboard. Each panel is laced with tubes, providing a channel for the cooling brine piped in from a compressor. The system may be installed or removed easily by one person. "You can take the whole thing down and store it in your garage," says the inventor.

Although this backyard artificial rink has not yet been marketed its invention is a typical illustration of this Middlebury graduate's mind at work. "The ideas always come from that sort of thing," Lewis says. "You look at something and say, 'My God! How can we reduce that to something simple?' "

Reducing things to their simplest form is not just a part-time hobby for this 38-year-old alumnus. Lewis has received U.S. and foreign patents for 18 manufacturing processes, machines, and finished products.

Some of these concepts were patented soon after Lewis received his Master's in organic chemistry from Middlebury in 1960. For the next eight years, John directed research at Polymers, Inc., a Middlebury firm which specializes in products made from synthetic materials. Then, for two years, he was Vermont's Technical Services director, serving manufacturing firms across the state, advising their representatives of new products and methods of product development.

Finally, in June 1970, thinking he might as well begin developing and manufacturing products for himself, Lewis established Tucel Industries in a small building, tucked away at the end of a Main Street alley in Middlebury. The company, which now employs up to 13 people, specializes in cleaning implements, including surgical sponges, industrial brushes, windshield cleaners, and many other scrub-up and mop-up items made from synthetic materials.

A German corporation is licensed to manufacture, distribute, and sell Tucel products in Switzerland, Austria, France, Italy and Denmark. Lewis has other licensees in England, Canada, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and Japan. Two Japanese businessmen spent two weeks in Middlebury studying a machine Lewis invented; then they returned home, placed an order for the machine, and are about to begin operations in Japan.

In the United States, most of Lewis' products are sold exclusively by such large corporations as Union Carbide, Dupont, and American Cyanamid, under their own brand names. A few items bearing the Tucel name will be sold by major grocery store chains.

As president of this small business, Lewis has a wider array of responsibilities than are usually associated with "presidents." Aside from inventing, manufacturing, and marketing new products, John writes checks, answers letters, repairs and lubricates machinery, designs tools, stuffs crates, hires employees, answers his own phone, and handles many other chores. "I do everything," Lewis confesses with a smile, "from cleaning the john, or going to the Post Office, to putting on my coat to go off to Europe."

Each morning at 6:00 he arrives at work dressed to accomplish any one of those tasks. Usually, this means an open-collar shirt, work pants, and work shoes. In fact, he might be mistaken for an outdoorsman with the kind of rugged, good looks usually seen in a TV commercial.

But each day's tasks keep him moving from one end of his small plant to the other.

The principal activity at Tucel, these days, is the production of tufted surgical sponges. On a record day, Lewis says, the firm has produced 18,000 of these items, but output averages about 9,000 during a typical eight-hour shift.

These surgical sponges are a simple but clever invention. They look like a small, household sponge with tufts of fiber added, giving the implement a scrubbing, as well as a wiping surface. What is unique is the method Lewis developed of bonding the fiber tufts with the sponge to produce a dual cleaning surface.

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE
HONOR ROLL OF DONORS
1972-1973

Pete Bostwick's act as National Alumni Chairman for Annual Giving is going to be a tough one for me to follow. In three years of Annual Giving, Pete and his co-workers and team leaders have earned two national awards, and $5,000 in prize money.

In 1972-73 we felt the effect of the competition offered by our own 175th Anniversary Fund and our total Annual Giving was fortunate to surpass last year's by $150. However, Alumni dollars and donors increased substantially, as did the Parents Fund, and these two are our most important constituent groups. Corporation gifts were off a bit and this hurt the total.

In the next two years, as I take over from Pete, we hope to maintain our improvement in the base of support—the growing number of individual donors—while raising sights for the average annual gift. In view of the demands of the 175th Anniversary Fund, we are going to be severely challenged, but that's what makes it interesting!

The Vermont Division of AAUW has honored Faith Linsley of Barre by naming a study grant in her name. The fellowship of $500 will be awarded to a worthy student for graduate study. This grant recognizes Miss Linsley's many years of dedicated service to the ideals of AAUW. She is a charter member of the Barre branch, has served as its fellowship chairman for many years and is at present its historian. At the state level she served as a member of the Gary Tupper Award Committee for 10 years, in six of which she was chairman. For more than 40 years, she was an English teacher at Spaulding High School.

One function of this column should be to remind classmates of future events and in that spirit, I hope that many of you will mark your calendar for the annual Alumni Winter Weekend, January 19-20. Besides the varsity hockey game with the Alumni at 7:30 p.m. and the basketball game against Colby at 4 p.m., there will be, of course, skiing at the Bowl. It's a good time to combine a mini winter vacation with skiing and renewing those friendships missed in the fall. Also, it is an all-alumni weekend, not just for specific classes; it's been a lot of fun in recent years. So mark your calendar: January 19-20, 1974.

The Brooks Range stretches from east to west for 400 miles across northern Alaska. The southern slopes of the western half of this drain into the Noatak River which flows westward for 200 miles before turning southward and emptying into the sea at Kotzebue (that town well-known to all readers of Mad magazine). The U.S. National Park Service sponsored a $131,000 study, initiated this past summer, of the entire Noatak River basin by Dr. Steven Young's Center for Northern Studies, Wolcott, Vt. (See "Tracking Migrant Flora from Pole to Pole," Winter '72 News Letter.) With six other scientists and four graduate-student assistants, Steve started upriver from Kotzebue on 15 June and at this writing (early Sept.) has not been heard from. But by October he'll be back in Vermont, we hope, with a fresh set of great photographs.

"Then I think you have a responsibility to try to manage the institution. Remember, leadership is not just your own initiative but the initiative of others. Because it's a special kind of community and we could talk about the relationship of the different parts of it, the competences of the different parts of the institution, which you come to recognize, to identify, and to depend upon: the great competences of the Faculty, the competences of our financial people, competences of editors, the competences of the people who run the buildings and grounds. It's a very wide-ranging community!

"But I was about to speak of the need for restraint in office—the holding back when you have the authority to move; knowing that you haven't yet heard enough, or knowing at what point you have to act and because it's a human judgment and it isn't the kind of thing you can suspend action on, you move. But the time of restraint is sometimes the hardest time and everyone about you is urging you to move—'Get off dead center!'—and yet it isn't clear enough to you . . . This is a trying time."

"If I got 50 or 60% of settled decisions that I felt in retrospect were good, I would feel reasonably content. I'm sure there were mistakes, and there are mistakes both of over-consultation and under-consultation. By over-consultation I mean that you lead people to have 'great expectations' which can be disappointed—nothing worse to an administrator! They don't understand the word 'consultation' and are surprised when you don't do what they have suggested that you should do. Under-consultation? You have not prepared the groundwork for a change of direction and you catch people in the dark; they feel 'jumped,' and they don't like it. So again there's a balance between consulting it to death, to the point where you really are going to discommode, to upset people, and not consulting enough."

"A major part of the institution from the president's point of view—of the president's activity—is the Board of Trustees. At one point I said that I thought this Board had been very fair to me in delegating responsibility to me and holding me accountable to them; but giving me the authority to go ahead and act—so that I wasn't always having to run back to the Board for approval for everything. Although there are formal ways in which the Board gives its imprimatur and approval to what I do: a president's responsibility involves keeping the Board of Trustees well-acquainted with what's going on in substantive ways. Not the day-to-day operation: we don't want, I think, the Board running the institution; they don't want to run it. They'll get somebody else to run it if it isn't run satisfactorily. But they do want a sense, themselves, of the texture and fiber of things. They want a feel of how things are on the campus.

"And then, of course, they bring their own special competences; those tend to be a competence in finance; the Buildings and Grounds committee has been very useful; the Law committee has been enormously useful to the institution. And then there's a kind of a cumulative experience and wisdom that these men and women bring in a dispassionate and objective way to the institution, that I've found very helpful. And when you have a problem and you're right up to there in it, and you've really lost your perspective, it helps enormously to sit down with a group of men who themselves are not going to have to live with it from moment to moment. They can say 'Well, now look, wouldn't it be better if you did this?' They usually don't tell me what to do; they'll give me advice and guidance. Of course the management of finances is a very important part of any institution, and there we have a very unusual ability in the Board. So I'm in touch, by telephone, by letter, with these men and women, the chairpersons of the various committees.

"And when the College has to raise money, over and over again it's a trustee who is the person that can represent the institution, initially. He can say, 'I wish you'd see the President; let him come down and tell you what his campaign is about and what they're trying to do for their 175th anniversary.' A good example: this spring we had a trustee who was in very close touch with two of the trustees of a foundation. And I was invited to come and make a presentation

June. Starting in 1944 she taught in a number of American colleges before returning to Meriden in 1958. She lives at 98 Winthrop Terr., Meriden 06450.

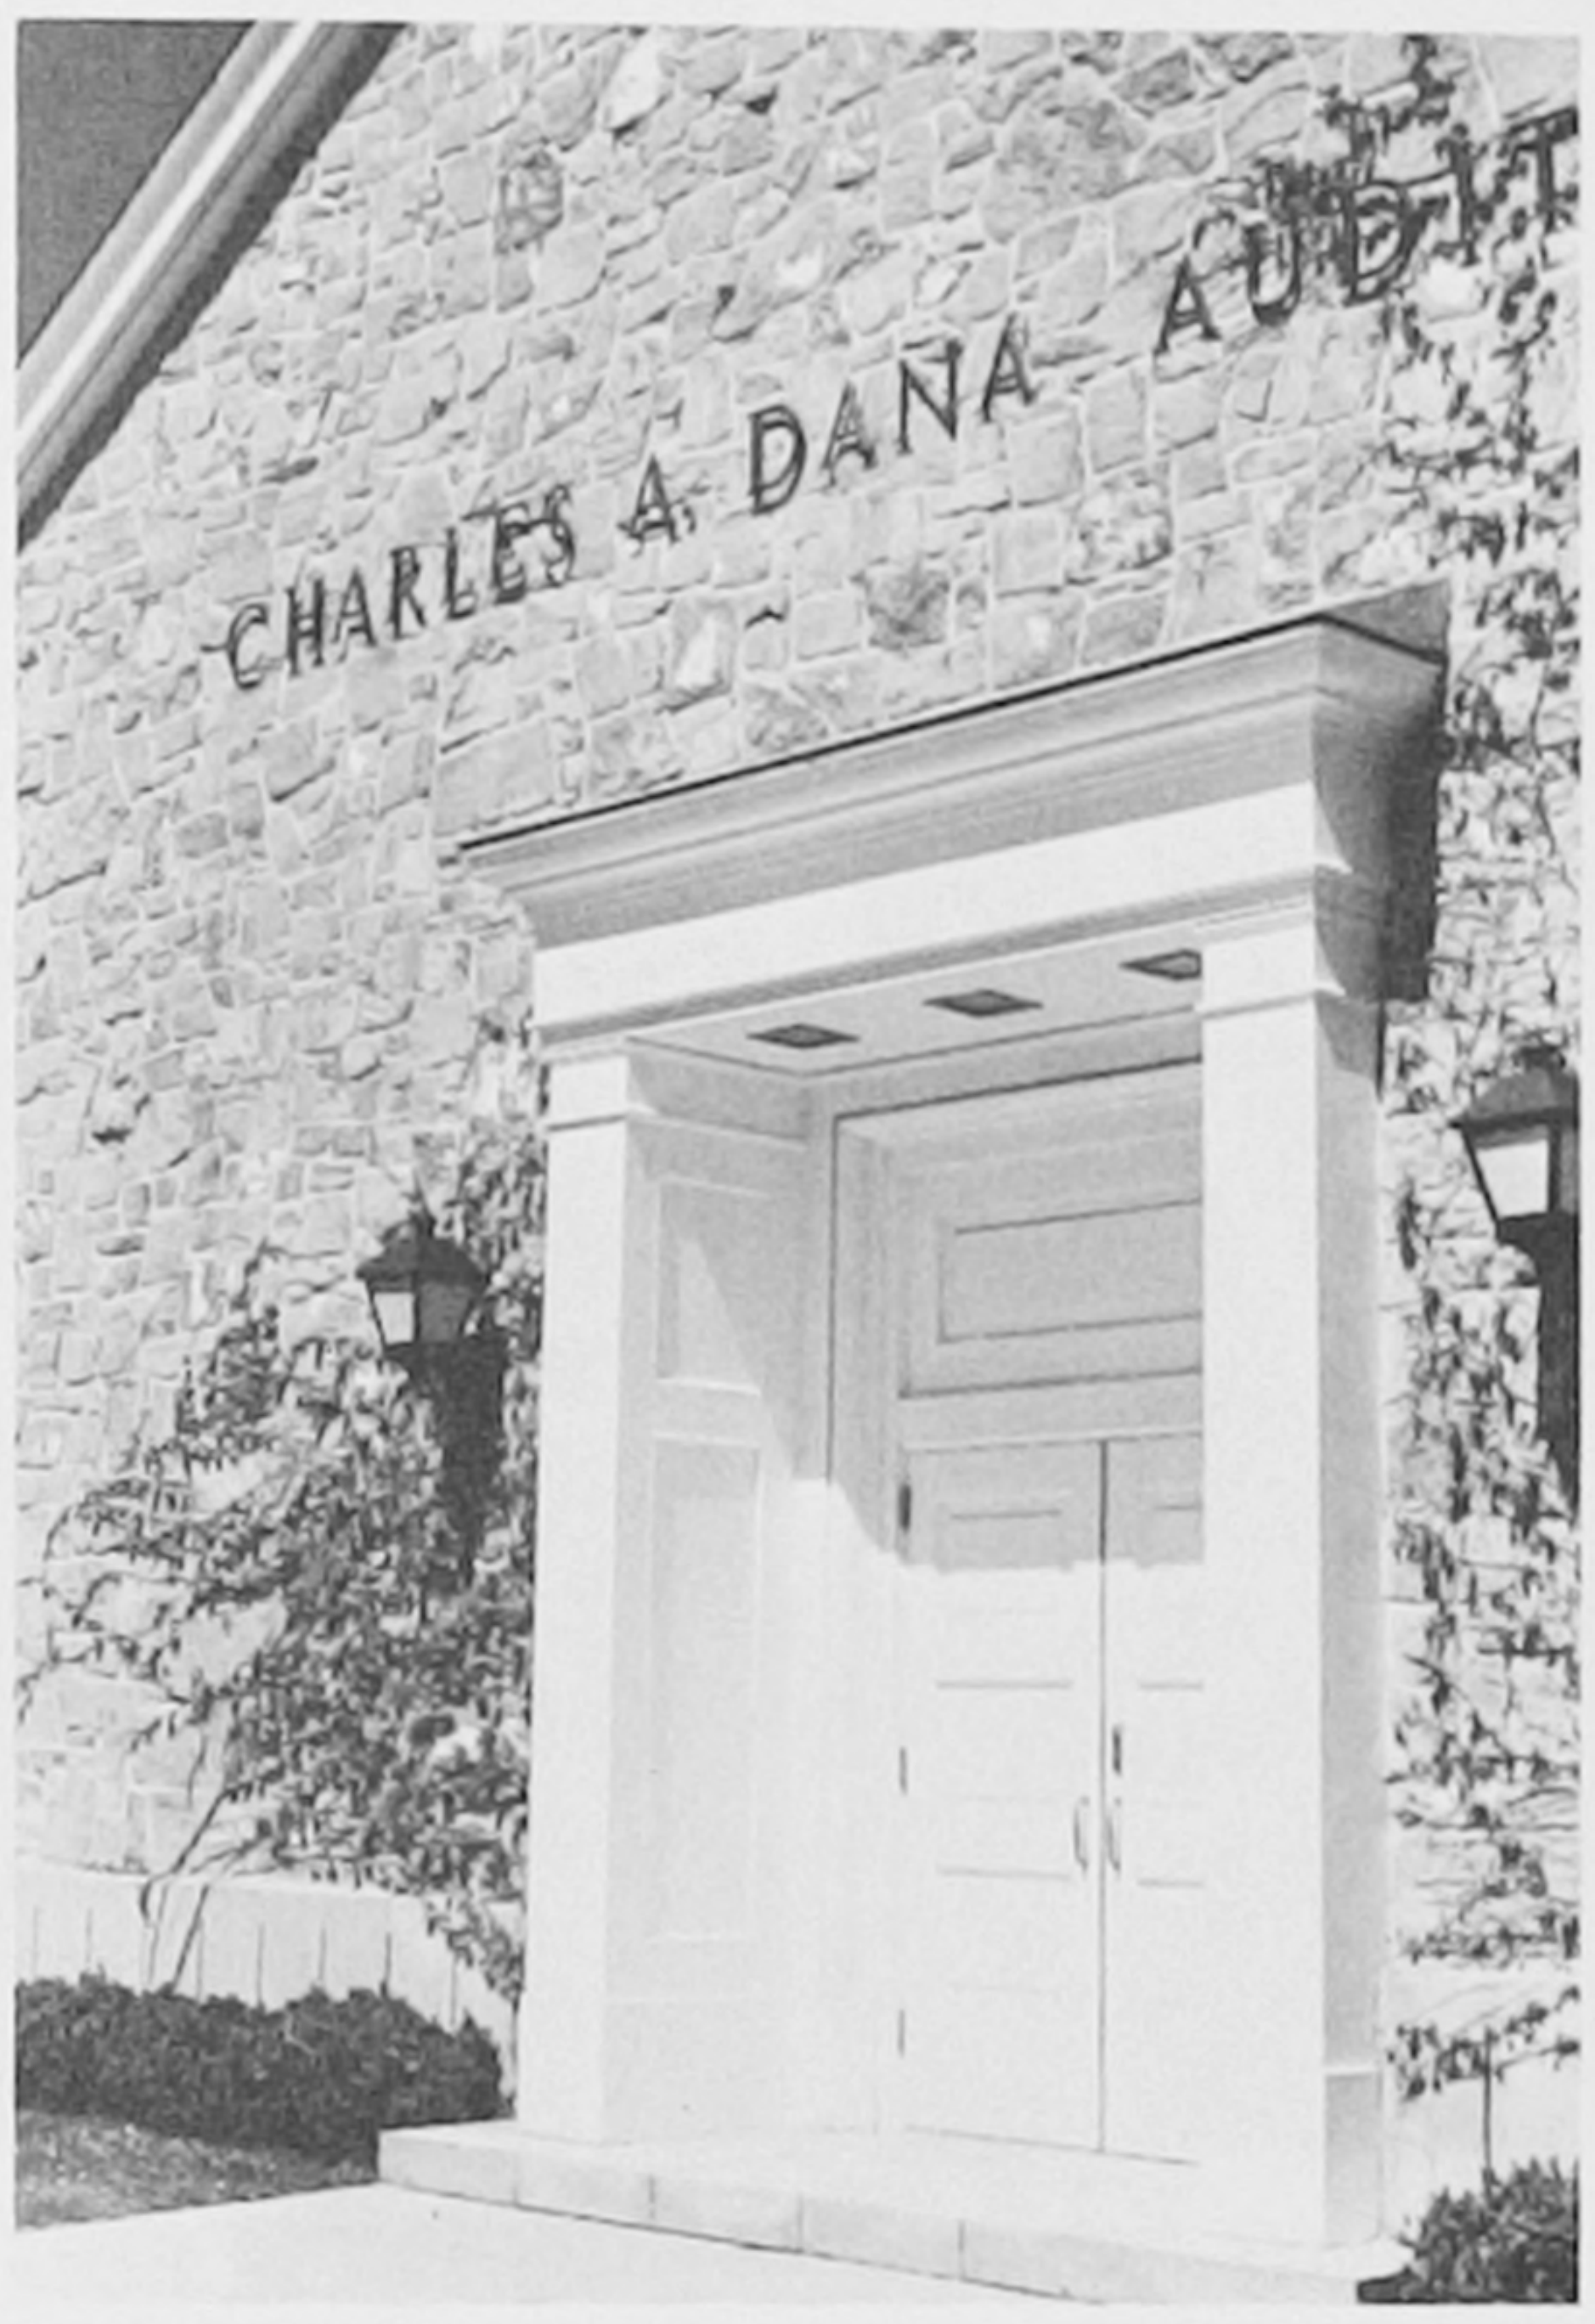
A. Johnson Endeavor challenge grant. Because I think without the Endeavor challenge we would have had harder going, much harder going, on this capital campaign than we have.



"I'll never forget my first experience as a fund raiser when we were seeking support for the Sunderland Language Center. Mr. Charles A. Dana came on campus and I was absolutely a brand-new, wet-behind-the-ears, salad-days, freshman president and here was this giant of American industry; he was going to come up and might possibly give us a grant, and we just did everything wrong! We invited him to a formal dinner in my dining room and we had a whole mass of people around. (I learned later that this was my first mistake, when I got to know Charles Dana and how to work with him far better.) Stephen Freeman was there and made an elegant, intellectual explanation of why the building was designed as it was and finally Mr. Dana began to ask difficult, embarrassing questions about the building and why it was organized the way it was. And he'd say 'Why don't you put a door in there?' and 'Take this out.' You could see Dr. Freeman's face just drain white, and I didn't really know what to do. The evening sort of ended up in one of those inconclusive occasions and I thought 'Oh boy, on my first try at this!' As we were walking out the door and I was saying goodnight to Mr. Dana, I said, 'I hope very much you will consider this', and he put his arm around me and he said, 'It'll be all right.' I went down to see him the next day at the Middlebury Inn and he said 'Now would you tell me what it was that you were trying to tell me last night?'

"This, of course, is part of the fun of it. To learn the differences among and between the people and the organizations that you deal with."

The two most worrisome problems for the Administration in the past decade have been the explosion of the drug culture in the late '60s and the Vietnam-occasioned student radicalism that finally closed down classrooms on 450 campuses across the country after the Kent State killings in May 1970. Three years later President Armstrong recalled those weeks and what he learned:

"Those were stirring times, they really were! And in retrospect the feeling that I carry away from them—and it mellows into a judgment—is that there was a coming together in a period of distress and high dismay about what was happening in our nation, and happening to our nation, as a result of the historic events in Vietnam. So that whereas at times it seemed divisive—and I think was seen as divisive and disruptive by those who weren't close to it—actually there came to be a sense of understanding one another better, a coming together: I never felt as close to the community and the students, I think, as I did during this extraordinary period.

"On the other hand it also seemed to me that young men and women did come to understand better that there are not simple, instant solutions to many of the problems they were tackling. And this was a source of frustration and out of that frustration, I think, came some excesses—you know the terrible problem for the non-violent person who has to be violent in order to maintain the principles of non-violence—it was a terrible kind of dilemma that we were in!

"I think there were also students that, in retrospect, came to feel manipulated by those who were stronger, to that foundation. All I want is an entrance into the door. Once in, and I have a chance to talk, then it's my responsibility.

"Then, finally, there must be a custodial and legal instrument, a corporate instrument, for the person of the institution. This the Trustees are as a body. They are not themselves paid; they have no personal stake in it; there's nothing beneficial to them. They do this, as it were, freely and out of a concern for higher education. They may have devotion and personal feelings out of the past, but when it comes right down to the vote, they're not voting on their own salaries; they're not voting on anything that will affect them directly."

"Alumni of an institution of this kind—that is, a private institution, an independent institution—are a vitally significant constituency. Not solely for financial support, but many of them can't support the institution any other way. They're actively engaged in their lives; they're far-removed geographically and they have no other way, except by financial support, of saying 'We believe in the kind of experience we had and we want that sort of experience to continue in our society. And because we went to that institution, to Middlebury, we want to support it.'

"But I've hoped very much that there would be some new initiatives in this area for quite a while, whereby we could reach people through their interests, through their adult interests; that we could address ourselves to those who are, say, in the teaching profession, those who take an interest in sports, and those who have, say, particular disciplines that they are interested in. I've hoped that the College could respond to the competences that they have and their interests, rather than simply to come at them as an undifferentiated mass of people when we know that the spectrum is as wide as the whole society, roughly speaking. Middlebury alumni are not monolithic and of one grouping. So we're going to have to devise, I think, if we're really serious in our commitment to our alumni, some more effective, I think more engaging, and attractive ways of interesting our alumni over the years in the institution.

"As I say, we become increasingly aware that our alumni are a constituency that we have to depend on. We don't know where else to turn, and if they don't believe in us and don't want us to continue, then it may very well be that we can't—it may well be that we will not be able to continue."

Noting the President's splendid record as a fund raiser, particularly with foundations, we asked how much of his time he devoted to those efforts:

"My best guess would be somewhere on the order of a third or perhaps a little bit more. This with private institutions is going to be a continuing problem for anyone who takes the position of president. He's going to find that the gap between the college's income and the cost of operation is going to grow, and he's going to have to find sources of support to keep education from pricing out the very constituency that he wants to have come to Middlebury.

"Admissions and Development! There's no way around it. The president has to be concerned about the attractiveness of his institution to applicants, and he has to be concerned about public relations and fund raising. So I would guess that in two capital campaigns since I've been here . . . the first one now seems to have been almost a dream campaign: we got the Ford Challenge grant and things went so well; it was in the busy '60s, the '60s that were moving along very well in the market and tax legislation was favorable to the donor. Indeed, if I were to be critical at all of that campaign, we didn't press far enough. We could have gone to an overrun much larger than we did. Whereas in this capital campaign, it's all the way, every bit, right down to the line! We're still hoping very much we're going to have an overrun, but it's been harder. It's a significantly larger target. Thank heaven for the Endeavor Challenge of $2 million!

"You asked me about some of my satisfactions: surely I couldn't fail to say, that the award of a Ford challenge grant shortly after appointment was one of the great satisfactions that I've had as president—that I worked with the Ford Foundation and did receive that grant—and the other was, of course, the Christian wearing, I had just thrown something on and rushed out; but it was cold as the dickens and somebody came and put a coat over my shoulders.

"We went back to my house and had a rally of the staff at 6 o'clock in the morning and decided that the thing to do was to call the whole community together in Mead Chapel at 10:30, which we did. I think from that moment on the community decided to come together, to set up its own system of maintaining order, and there was an enormous sense of engagement and involvement in this community.

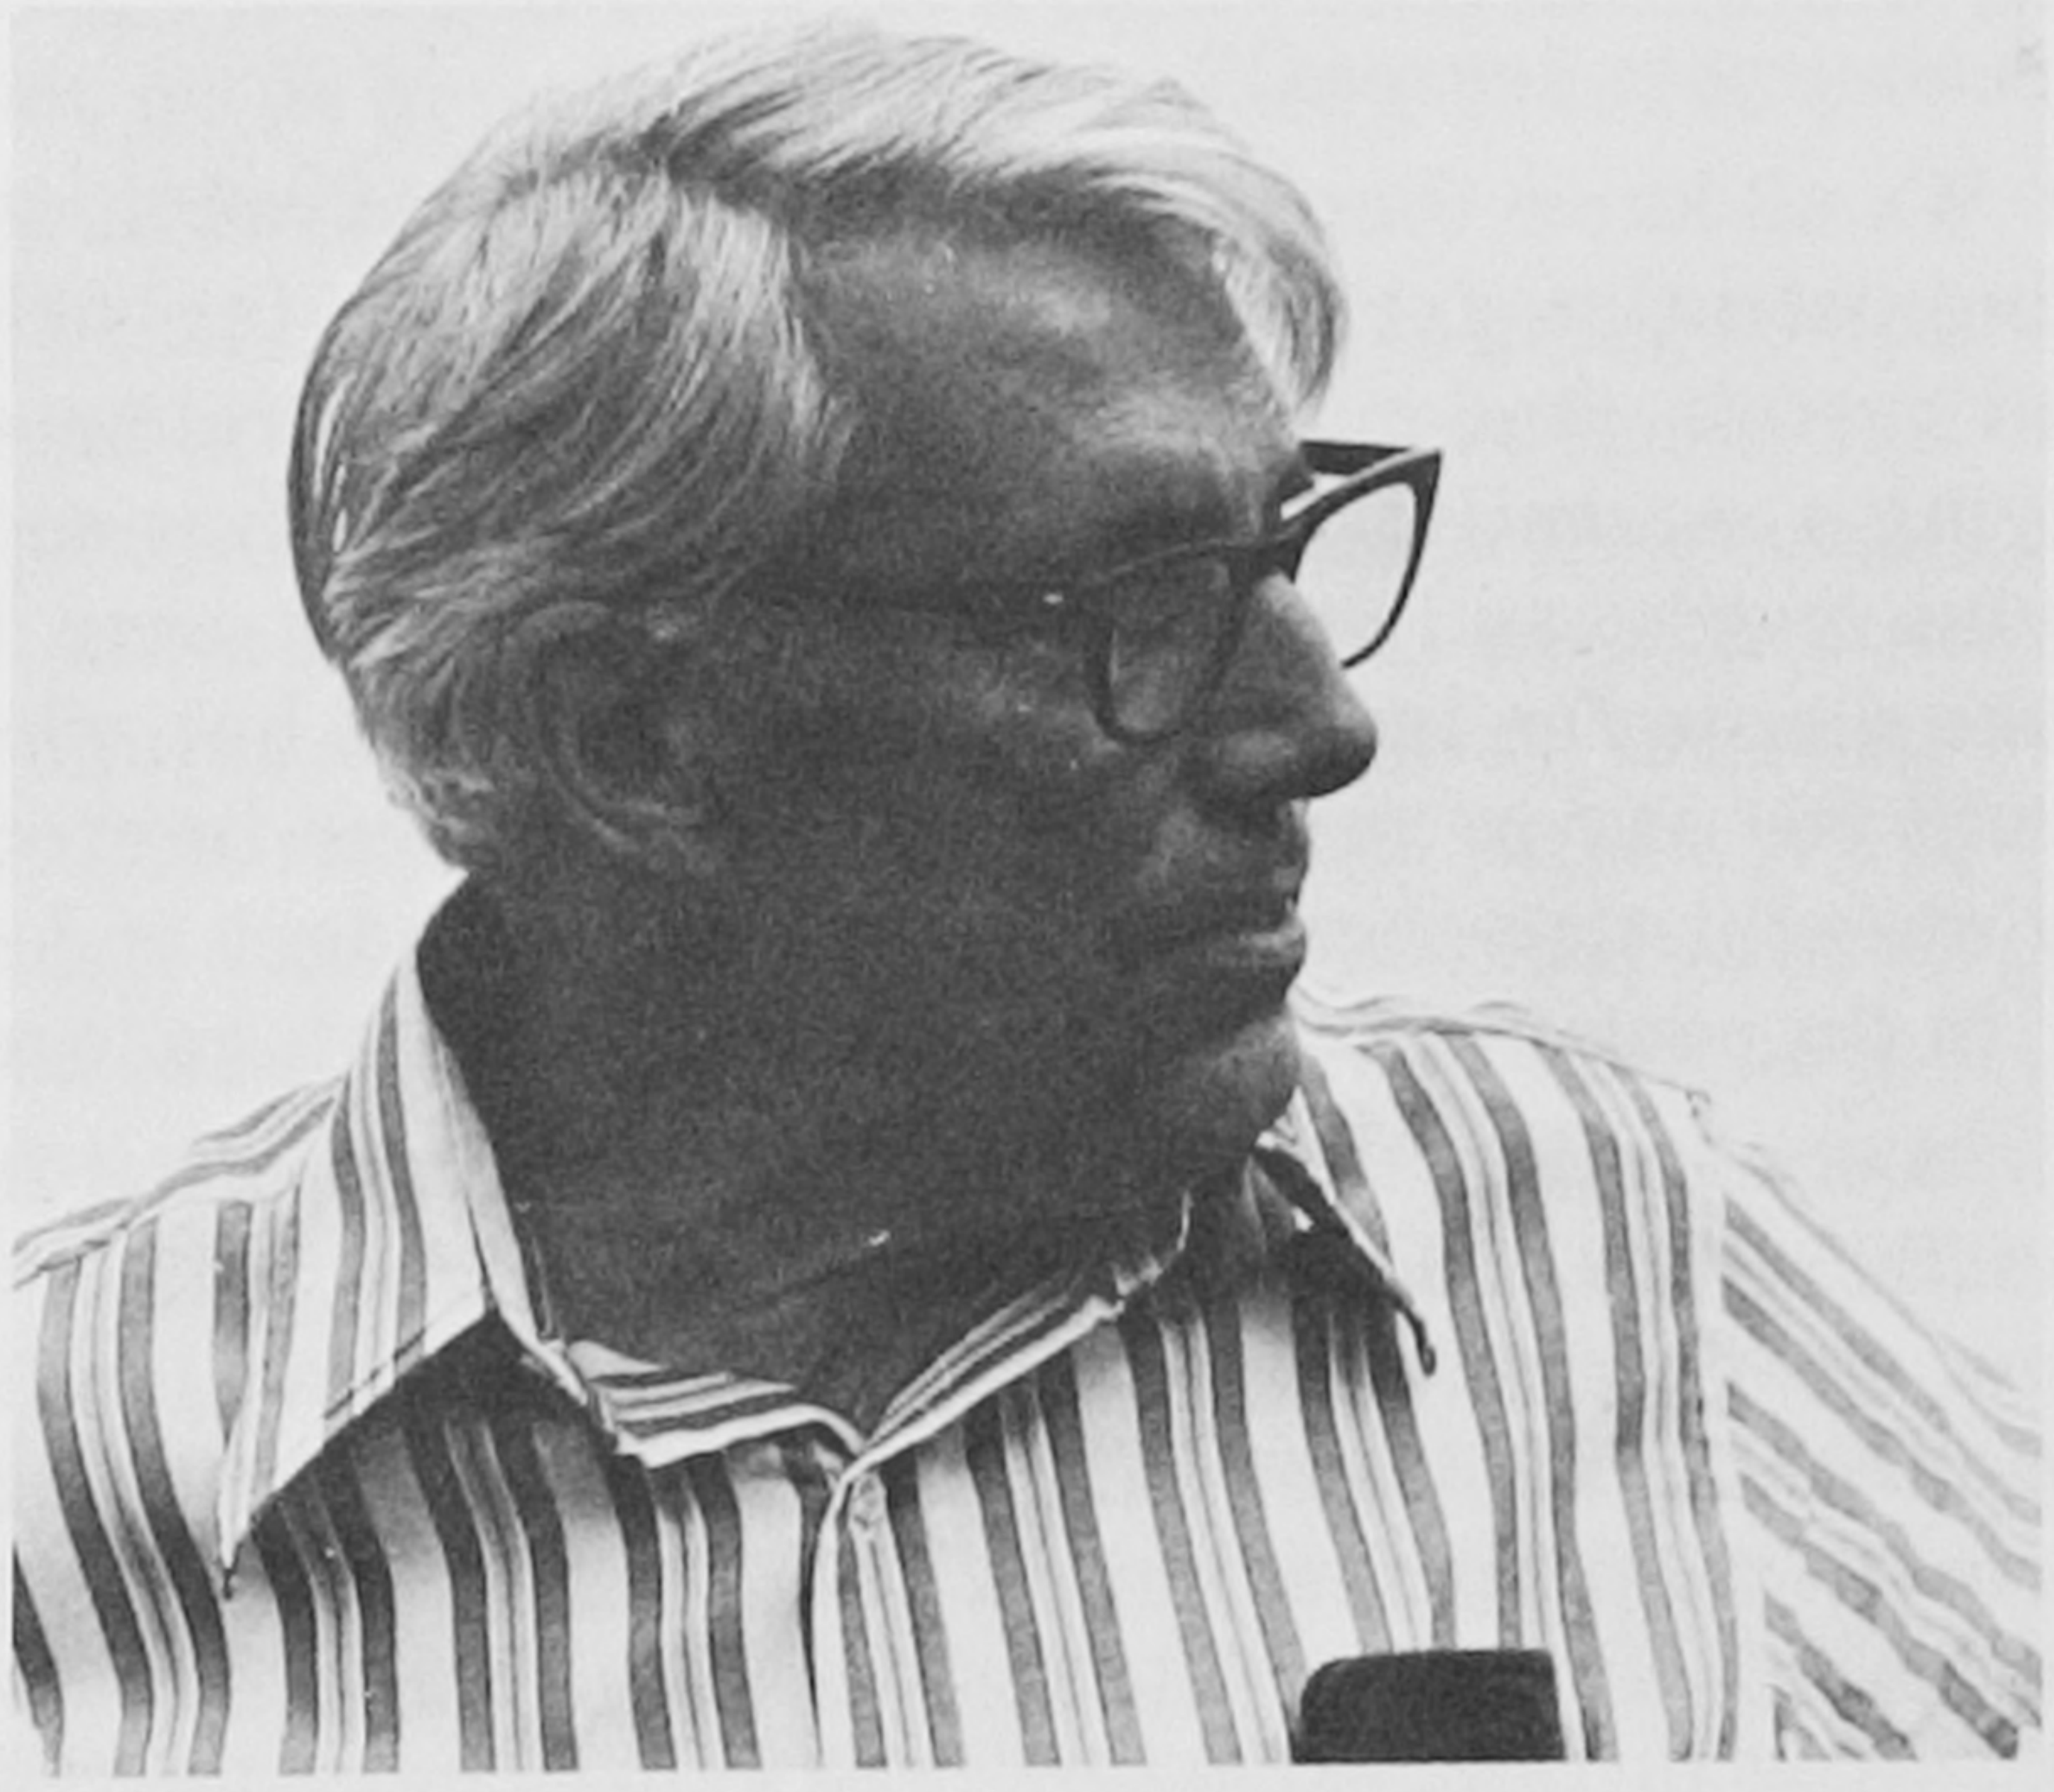
"One of the problems that we had during that period was incredulity among our staff in Administrative offices and in Buildings and Grounds, those who worked in the kitchens, in the dormitories; they were troubled and dismayed. Here were these young men and women with an opportunity to get an education and they had abandoned it! And they felt also that there was a kind of disloyalty, here. And as the principal officer of the College I felt a kind of helplessness because I had no way for their voices to be heard so that they knew that those responsible for the institution heard and understood their position. I have hoped that we would have some means of receiving the views, the voices—you know my belief that 'a single voice should be heard'—and that every voice in some way or other should be heard. For me, at least, it has sensitized me, I think, to the issues and the concerns of the community: I think I've been more responsive, much more quickly, and I think I am a little bit better able to distinguish between those concerns which are deep and fundamental and those which are ephemeral and which you need to deal with fairly quickly."

"But you simply—you have to make peace with yourself. There isn't enough time in the day for me to do the things that I would like to do or can think to do—interviews, committee meetings, dictating, listening, talking, and thinking. There will be matters that come up when you have a community as large as this—and this is small but still, for one person—if you're going to be in touch with people as individuals. I have faculty who'll come to my office unscheduled and want to see me. Of course, I see them, right away. When a student comes, almost always I'll see a student; I make a continuous, everlasting effort to try to deal with people as individual persons, and not let us get into the bureaucratic distance that is a function of the large institution. I'm tempted to say that I think it's impossible. But at the same time, I wouldn't stop trying. I wouldn't do it any other way. That's not possible for me, either."

PURPOSES, PRIORITIES, AND FUTURE CONCERNS

During two relaxed sessions in his Old Chapel office, this summer, Dr. Armstrong touched on many subjects, including the aim of liberal arts education in relation to coeducation, to individual morality, to athletics, and to aesthetic as well as theoretical learning. He also talked about some principal problems of the next decade. Here are further excerpts from that interview:

A: "What brought me especially to Middlebury was that I believed in a small institution and I believed in coeducation. Because back there in 1964 that was not such a usual thing; people who were in single-sex institutions, segregated institutions, were well satisfied with themselves and thought that was the best way, and I remember when I left Princeton people would say to me 'You really want to go to a small college, and a coeducational one at that?' Precisely! That's where I think education can go on in a very special way. I thought that perhaps my own instincts, my own intuitions, would be better fulfilled here in this kind of an environment than in a large university or in a single-sex institution. My first teaching experience, my first bona fide teaching experience, was in a coeducational institution—at Indiana University as an instructor—and I never had, again, quite the same experience as a teacher. I enjoyed my teaching at Princeton: there was the Firestone Library; there wasn't a better place (perhaps one or two others would be comparable) where you could be a classicist and have someone to talk to and have an intellectual life in your own field. But as a teaching experience—just teaching itself—I found having men and women in the classroom was better."



Q: It's been noted with some chagrin, by educators, that all the White House staffers implicated in the Watergate scandal are college graduates. And higher education seems to have had little influence in sensitizing students to unethical and fundamentally antidemocratic behavior. Does this to your mind suggest a failure in the practice of educators? Or is it un-more articulate, whose blood pressures got higher and who rather lost contact with rationality. There was the loss, in higher education, of trust. We're still struggling with a similar distrust among the general public. We are creatures of society and we're given an enormous amount of freedom as long as we regulate ourselves. But there came times during that period—say '69, '70, '71—where I worried very much about the loss of confidence and trust in the educational process to manage itself, to keep itself in good order, to set a good example, to be critical in a constructive way. It seemed to me that we were being critical, sometimes, as though we were the only people who had a corner on the truth and nobody else down the street and nobody across the bridge had any kind of real perception of what was going on in Vietnam!

"So there was a shifting there and, as I say, it was a stirring and, I think ultimately, a constructive time for the institution. We still reap some of the benefits. I think I can say that now. There were times during it when I wondered very deeply what was going on, whether we could hang together. And as you probably all know, it was in a dramatic moment of fire that the community came together.

"I remember standing and watching the Recitation Building burn. It must have been 5 o'clock in the morning or thereabouts—students standing around in a kind of dull silence. What could one say in the face of this? It was cold and the wind was blowing a little bit and the firemen were doing their very best to contain the fire; there was no chance of putting it out because it was a wood structure. I don't know what I was

"You asked how we justify an intercollegiate sports program. There are at least three kinds of justification, I think. One is the need for young men and women to engage in competition. Now there are all sorts of competition. One kind involves physical ability, adroitness, skill in using your abilities in competition with someone else. I think this is a desirable thing; it's part of the enjoyment of life to be able to compete with others and then to learn what's involved in competition.

"So there are the skills, of course; there is the competition; and then there is what one learns from competition—about other people and about himself. Now this, granted, is for a relatively small number of students among the undergraduates. But there are those students and they do have that need, and we want to respond to them for that need just as, say, we respond to students who want to play a musical instrument, play an organ, or develop any other skills.

"Of course, I would have to say that, did we come down to the mark and have to make a judgment between a library and an intercollegiate athletic program, there isn't any question. But so far, we've not been pushed to the point where we had to make that kind of choice. And whenever there are headlines that say 'Not a penny for a Dental Clinic, but a million dollars for a Field House' you're obviously getting a kind of journalism that is not fair and is not taking into account a whole variety of priorities.

"But you do know, as I'm pretty sure most of our constituency knows, that this facility only emerged after our other building needs were met. Because if you asked me what kind of construction is going to go on at Middlebury College in the next years, my answer is probably, 'Very little, unless we expand our enrollment.' We may want to face up to some of the problems that grow out of changing residential needs—if we're going to have more married students, we may need to face that, but that's self-amortizing; I'm not as much worried about dormitory space as about instructional space. And I don't think that we're going to be building very much instructional space. So really, if the truth were known, the athletic program was funded last in the decade, 1963-'73."

Q: I've been looking at various official documents of the College and I find no statement of educational philosophy; and it seems to me that when we talk about a 'liberal arts education', maybe we don't all mean the same thing. What sort of person is Middlebury College attempting to produce? Do we want only student-scholars, here, to interact with teacher-scholars? The emphasis seems to be on thinking and whenever someone attempts creative writing or the arts (not thinking about the arts but attempting the arts) that this is somehow considered to be second-rate at Middlebury. I wondered what comments you have.

A: "I think that may have been true in earlier years. There was, I think, the tendency to 'celebrate cerebration', if you will, primarily. And that the net of the mind, as I say in one of my baccalaureates, the net of the mind is the business of the College—to deal with those ways in which we try to use our minds. We try to think, we try to analyze, we want to develop some skills to do this; but increasingly there's a growing awareness of the importance of doing, of performing, of experiencing drama or dance or music. I think we see this among the undergraduates and very much in the response of the College to it.

"I'm a little bit worried about getting into a posture wherein we separate this from thinking and we say we're going to have 'a program in the creative arts'. Making it a program seems to imply that there has to be a dichotomy between the parts of the human being —the thinking and the feeling, the cerebration and the performing. I think the way we're going, now, is better —that it's a total kind of experience. Of course the old cliché is that 'we seek to educate the whole person'. But if I were to be forced into trying to compress all of this, I think that's stil what we're trying to do: we're trying to give each person as full an opportunity as we can to realize his or her potentials and talents.

"And I don't believe it's for everyone, either. I don't believe that the experience at Middlebury College—at any liberal arts college—is really an experience that nurtures all talents and all kinds of person. If you don't have some intellectual power and some intellectual skills, you're going to have a pretty rough time of it in what we do here. So of course it does go back to teaching scholars."

"I think that the period of the '70s is going to be a period of faculty concerns. And so, as you know, this institution is seeking to address itself to the problem of tenure—both what we would regard, perhaps, as the strictures and limitations of tenure and on the other hand, its relation to academic freedom. But I see tenure, I see the problems of faculty, faculty salaries in an inflationary economy as very, very important questions during this next decade. And that only leads me to have to say that I think fund-raising for private institutions is going to be critical, since I don't see federal money in large amounts coming in institutional grants. And we cannot really look to the State of Vermont for help; it simply does not have the resources, nothing comparable to the resources of, say, New York State. Fund raising, next to Admissions, is going to be very, very important."

Q: Since there are six or seven applicants for every freshman that can be admitted, why are you worried? Are things going to get tighter in the next four or five years?

A: "There's an old adage that you worry when things realistic to expect college graduates to be better citizens than others in our society? Should colleges try to inculcate ethical standards of personal behavior?

A: "I guess you ought to recall all my baccalaureate addresses! Because you've heard me say, over and over again, that intellectual power without moral direction is bad education. And I don't know, and I don't believe there are any educators who do know, the ways in which you get the linkage! How you do, indeed, tie the intellectual experience, the artistic and aesthetic experience, of the liberal arts to the living man in his conduct, in his way of life. I don't know; I can't identify the ways. It certainly isn't by moralizing; it certainly isn't by exhortation; it is probably in some measure by example—the model, the admirable model, set not only by faculty members but by others in the community. That is, I've always believed that one of the virtues of this kind of an institution is that the student does have a chance to see different kinds of models in life. It isn't just that you go to the classroom and see a teacher as the model, but you see the person who prepares food for you, and you see people who work around the campus—pretty much the whole community. So, I keep saying this is part of our responsibility; in fact, I think it's one of our major responsibilities! Curiously and ironically, I have to say I don't think we know exactly how to do it. I can't help but believe that if we were to take a computer run on conduct of college graduates in the history of the nation, it would show that by and large the citizenship was pretty good. But the spotlight gets on Watergate and you're bound to find baccalaureate degrees!"

Q: We all know there's been a lot of guff heaved at the Administration for building the indoor playing field, that certain students have decried the immorality of buying a recreation facility when the Library has such crying needs, and so on. I suppose it's fairly easy to make a case for intramural sports facilities, but what would you say in response to criticism of our intercollegiate athletic program, its costs in our budget and so on, in the context of the goals of the liberal-arts college?

A: "Let me speak first to the need of the institution for an indoor field, and I put it precisely that way. You know our weather and that we've lived for a very long time without an indoor field and felt the need for it for recreational purposes. This is for all students, men and women. It's an indoor field for recreation, physical education, intramural sports; and I think probably less for intercollegiate sports than any other activity. There might be a couple of occasions in the fall when the football team will want to scrimmage, or run through a few plays before a game on a very bad day, but apart from that I don't see very much intercollegiate activity. I think a very large number of students are going to find this a place where they'll be wanting to go for recreation and physical exercise.

grant to endow a professorship in Language and Linguistics—a very substantial endowment, $750,000, which will make it possible for us to undertake experimentation in linguistics—that is, how languages work. We will be able to have, here, either one or several people. I'm not sure just how this endowment will be used, initially. Part of the responsibility of the new Committee on Foreign Languages will be to make recommendations on how we should proceed."

Q: Here's Middlebury 175 years old; it came through the 19th century by the skin of its teeth, and has really begun to blossom only since 1920, let's say. Now it's up to a point where, given a continued enrollment of 1800, we're pretty well fixed on plant; we're pretty well fixed in size of faculty, at least—we can always further upgrade the quality presumably; we can always hope for more endowment, for more endowed scholarships in particular; but the growth in physical terms has now levelled out; and over the next ten years it looks like an essentially stand-pat operation. Therefore if you're really going to develop further as an institution, obviously you've got to increase your enrollment. Is Middlebury College just going to stand pat for the next 25 years, until the year 2000?

A: "That's a great question and one we keep turning over. My response is, that we're not standing still, that just because we have reached a particular physical size, we're not now unavailable to newness, to qualitative growth, within those physical parameters. Then, I'm going to encourage, in every way I can, people who are going to push unreasonably for all sorts of things. I shall try to appoint department chairmen who will be appropriately aggressive! I think now what I will need to do is to continually stir the pot. And as an administrator, instead of becoming the person who tries to appear balanced and steady, what one needs is now to start pushing, to make changes. There are some changes that will be recommended in the Special Committee's report that are going to stir things up. But I believe some of them ought to be acted upon affirmatively. So let's set dynamic goals. And if you can create an atmosphere that this is for improvement, that it's not a disruptive sort of thing going on, but that we really need to do this, then we'll achieve them.

"I believe we've probably got quite a lease here! I have the feeling that there's something planted here that's going to be flourishing in 2073 in a way that Paul Moody or, to go back, Ezra Brainerd could not have dreamed. But when it comes to the specifics, it's hard to see beyond the next five years—or even that!"

are going well. I don't want my concern to begin when I'm on the down side. I want to keep, if I can, on the upside. But more specifically, of those 4,000 applications not all of them are bona fide applications to Middlebury: they are bona fide in the sense that they applied, but they're not all interested in coming to Middlebury. So that you can get your figures inflated. What are we admitting now? Something on the order of 1150 to get 550; so it's around a 48% return. And then I think we'd like to continue to have a fairly wide spectrum from which to choose: when you get down to the point where you're taking pretty much all those who qualify, you're narrowing the options."

Q: Won't the number of students of college age be decreasing?

A: "They will be decreasing until about 1980. After that it depends on what happens in Zero Population Growth and attitudes towards size of families. I just am very sensitive about the Admissions moment because roughly 66% of our income is from fees. That's the lifeline—our operational funds. One of our sister institutions in the state is having a very tight time; they're pretty much taking anyone who wants to attend. And their standards are just as high as they can afford to have them."

Q: Reputation is interesting. It seems to me that Middlebury's national reputation comes primarily from the Summer Language program. How does this summer program fit in, and how do we build a reputation for the undergraduate program?

A: "Yes, how we can make our institution known, make it come to mind as a place you might want to go to? As distinguished from other institutions, we're relatively limited. But this is something that over the years—consistently, steadily—Middlebury has been able to do. And look at the constituency that we reach: many of them high school teachers, teaching languages and other subjects, in high schools. So students tend to hear from their teachers; it's a built-in kind of advertisement as well as a major educational service.

"Another side of this, of course, is that if we develop, here, some ways in which language can be taught more effectively, more forcefully, more efficiently, we can propagate in the United States changes in language instruction more rapidly than any other institution. This is the place, in a way, where it seems to me we have a kind of national obligation, to maintain the teaching of languages and an attitude of experimentation and innovation in the teaching of languages.

"I used to be quite apologetic when I first came here and to say 'Won't you please stop talking about Middlebury as either a language school or a ski school?' I still don't like to talk about it as a ski school although I'm delighted to note that there are some fine young skiers that are very able students and would like to come here. But I think I may have been overly defensive about Middlebury's national and international reputation as a language school. I'm beginning to feel that this may be precisely what will make the difference for us—to make it possible for us to have a strong History department, a strong English department, a strong Art department, because we would be known and students would want to come to it. They might not major in language, but I do want to have undergraduate language departments that are worthy of the reputation the students think we have."

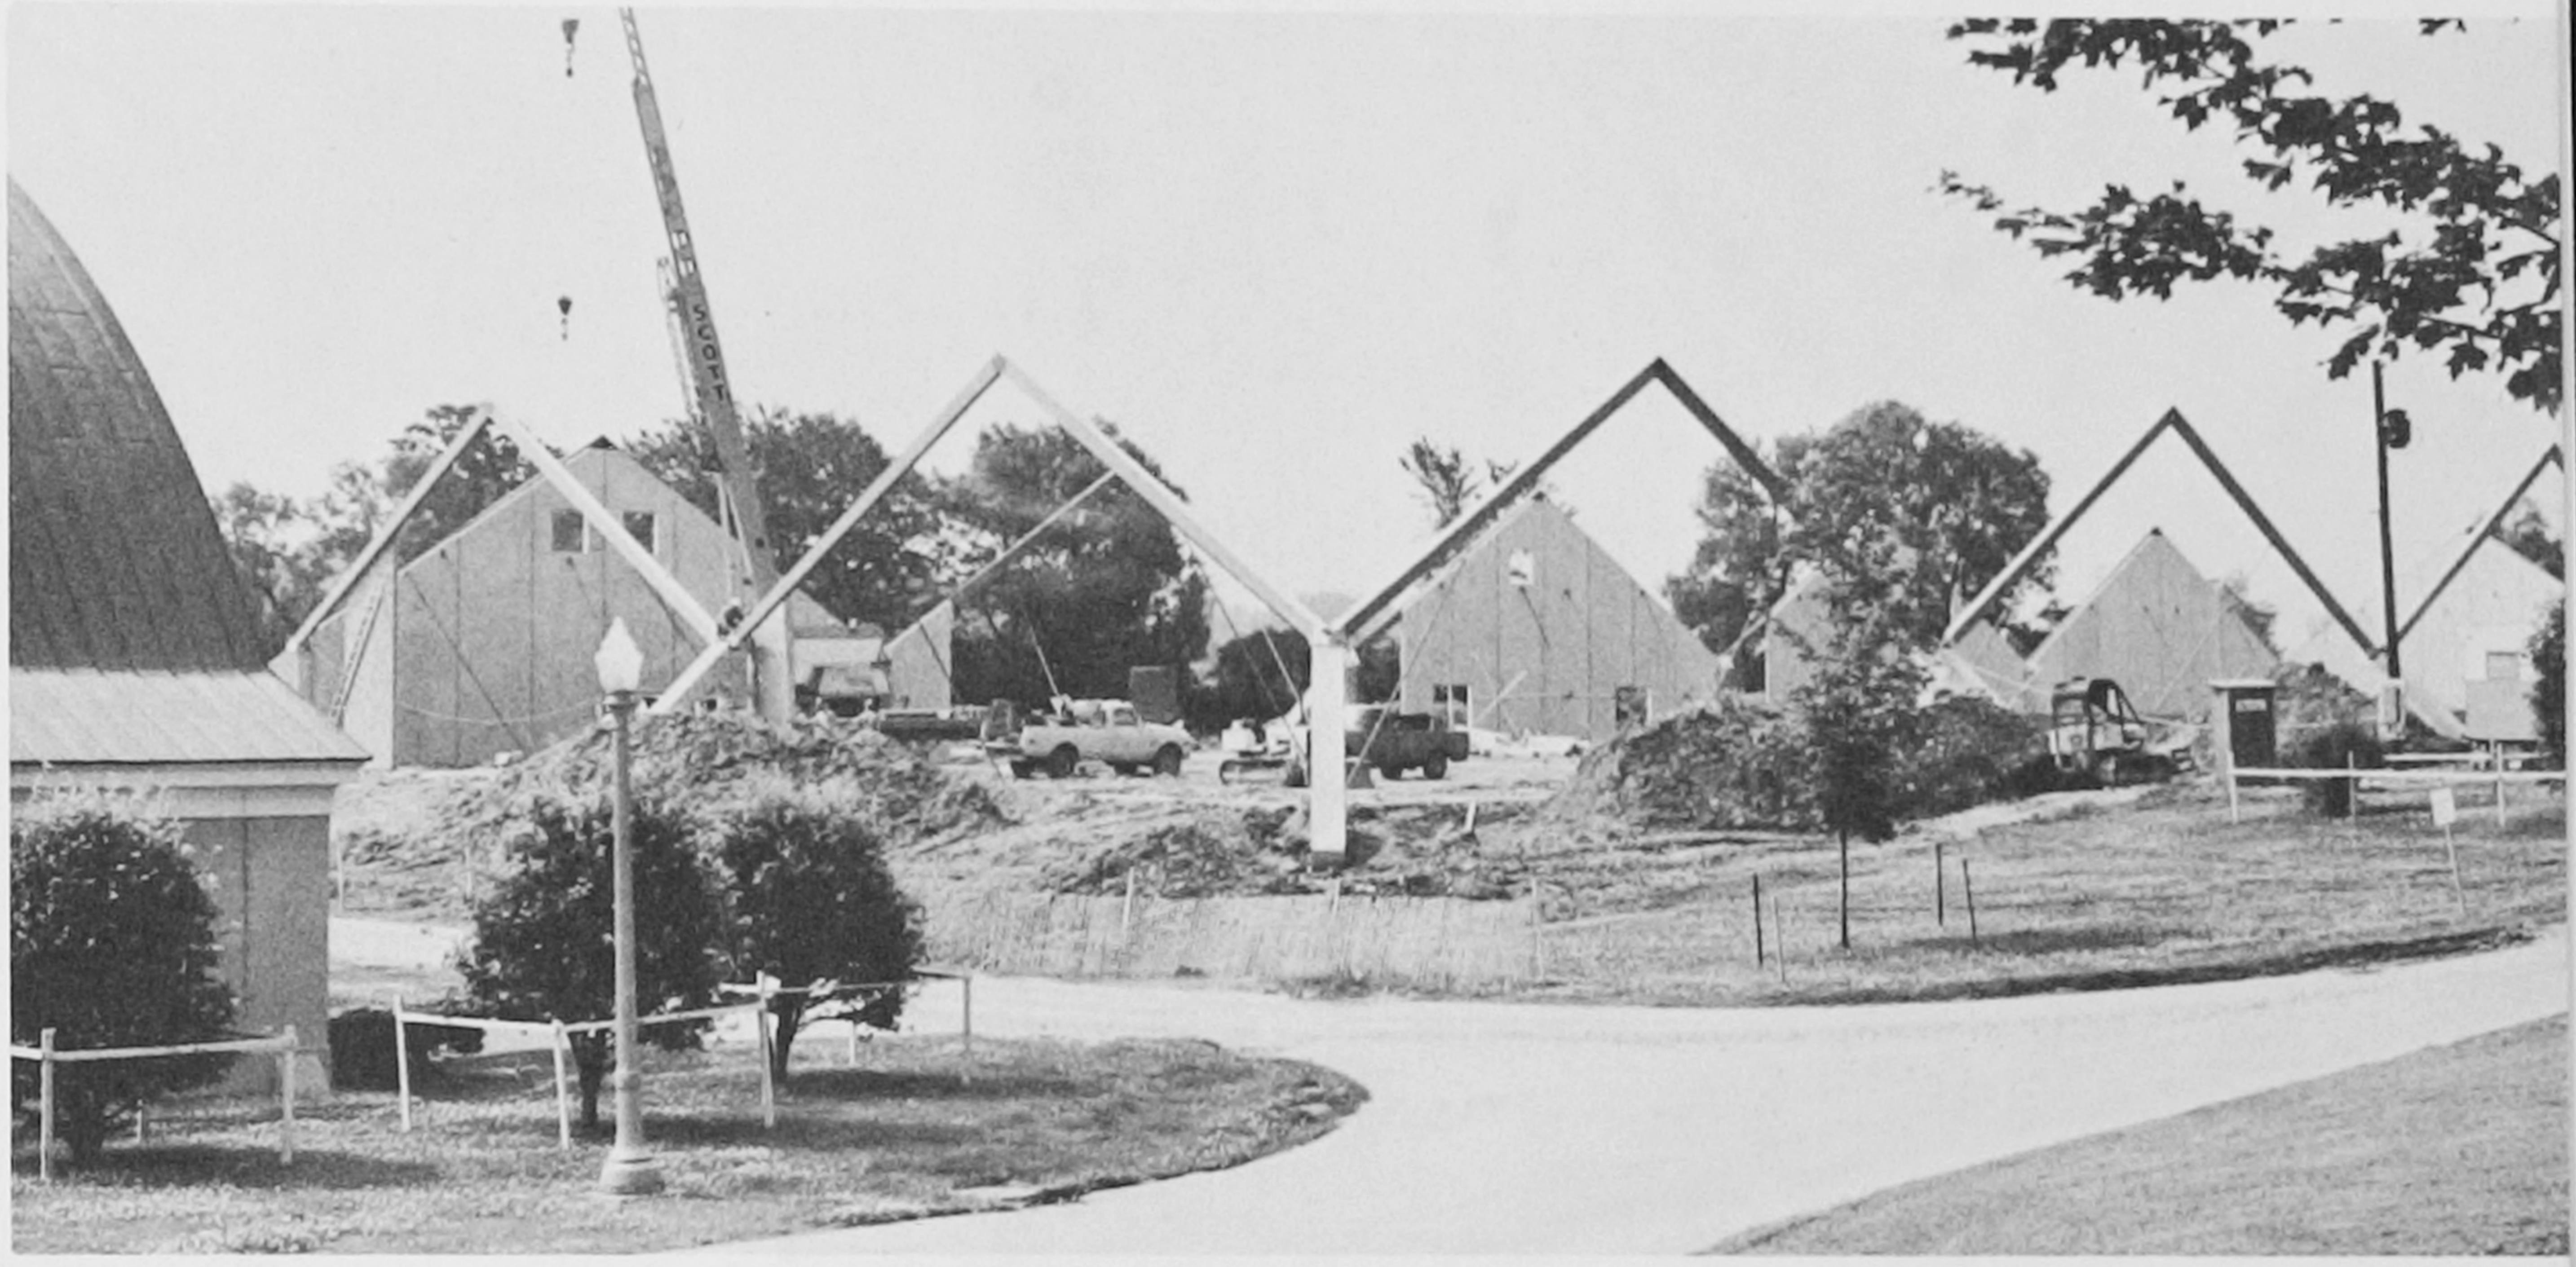
Q: You would foresee Middlebury as a leader in language education?

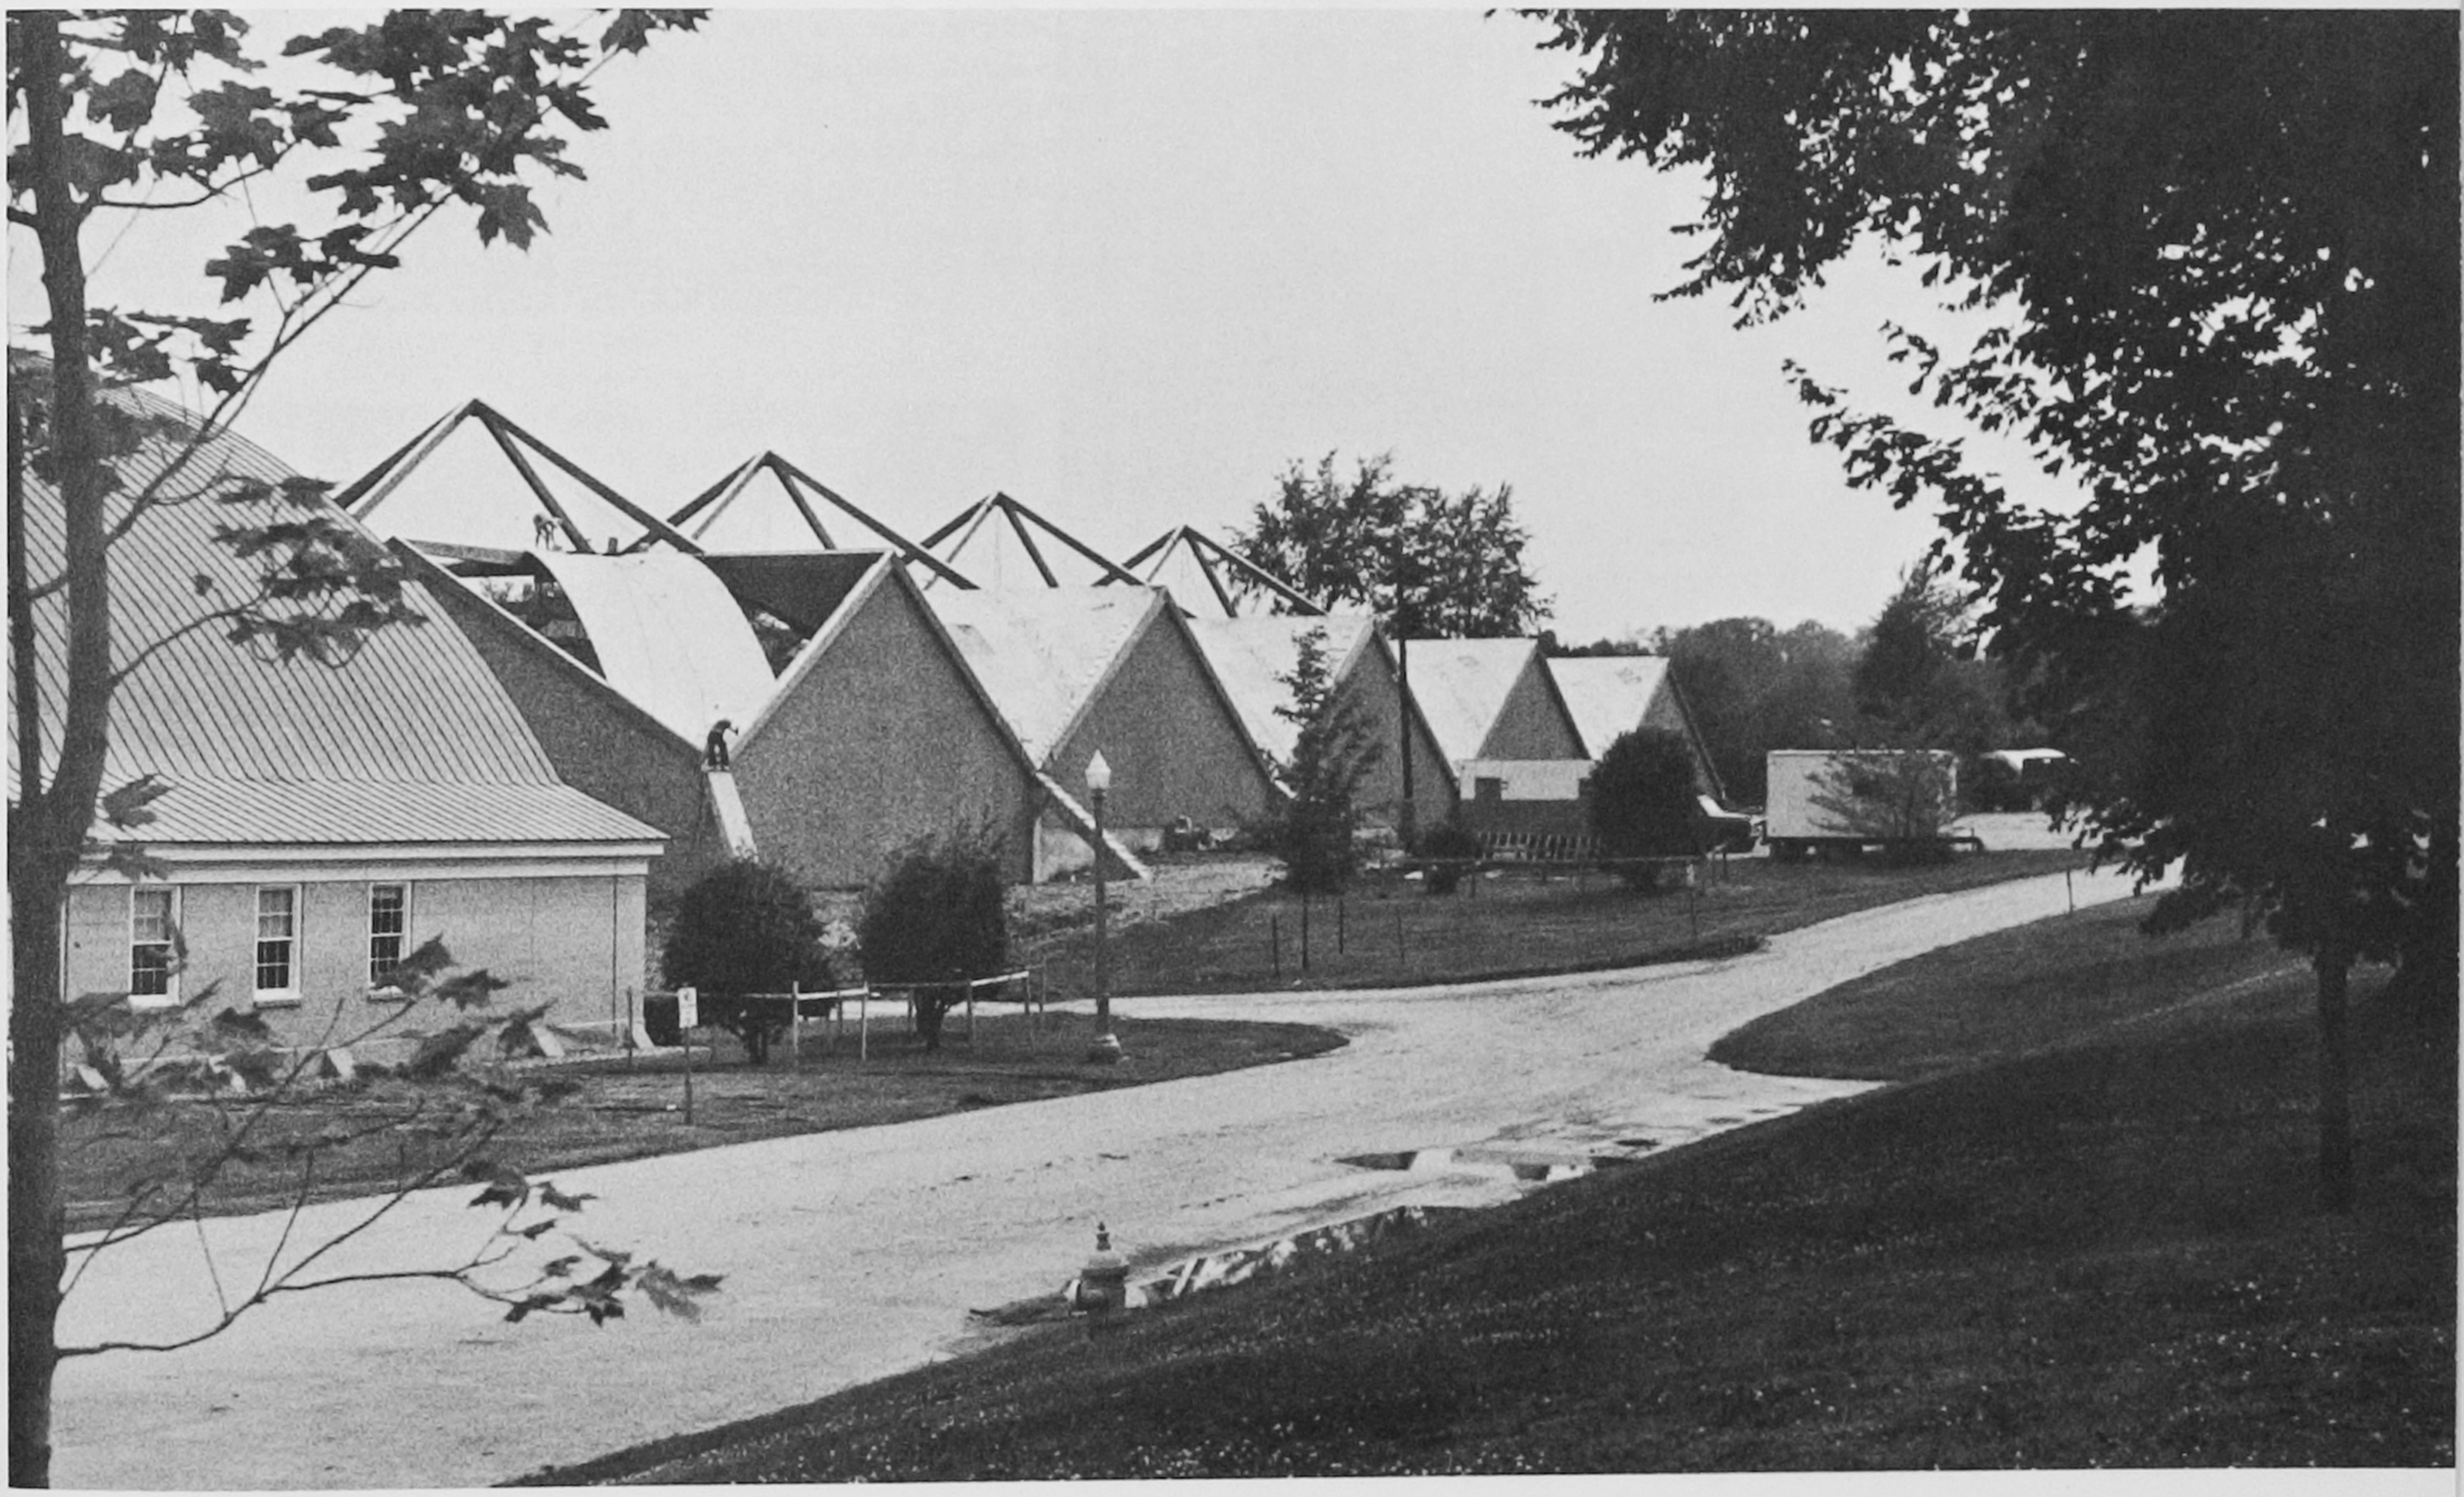
A: "I would hope very much so. And this is another major part of the Special Committee's report. It's recommending that the College direct its attention in a new way, with new emphasis, on our language programs, to the benefit of the whole College—a new federation, as it were, of summer, winter, and overseas operations.

"And you do know that we now have a foundation

NEW INDOOR FIELD RISES FAST

Right and below, indoor field is seen in relation to southwest end of Memorial Field House. Each gable wall consists of 8 aggregate-surfaced, concrete panels (surface detail shown at lower left). Each panel was cast face-down: a layer of stones was spread in soft grout and when grout had hardened, a concrete backing was poured. After curing, unmolded panel was then stood on end and the grout hosed away with high-velocity water jets, exposing the handsome pebbled surface.



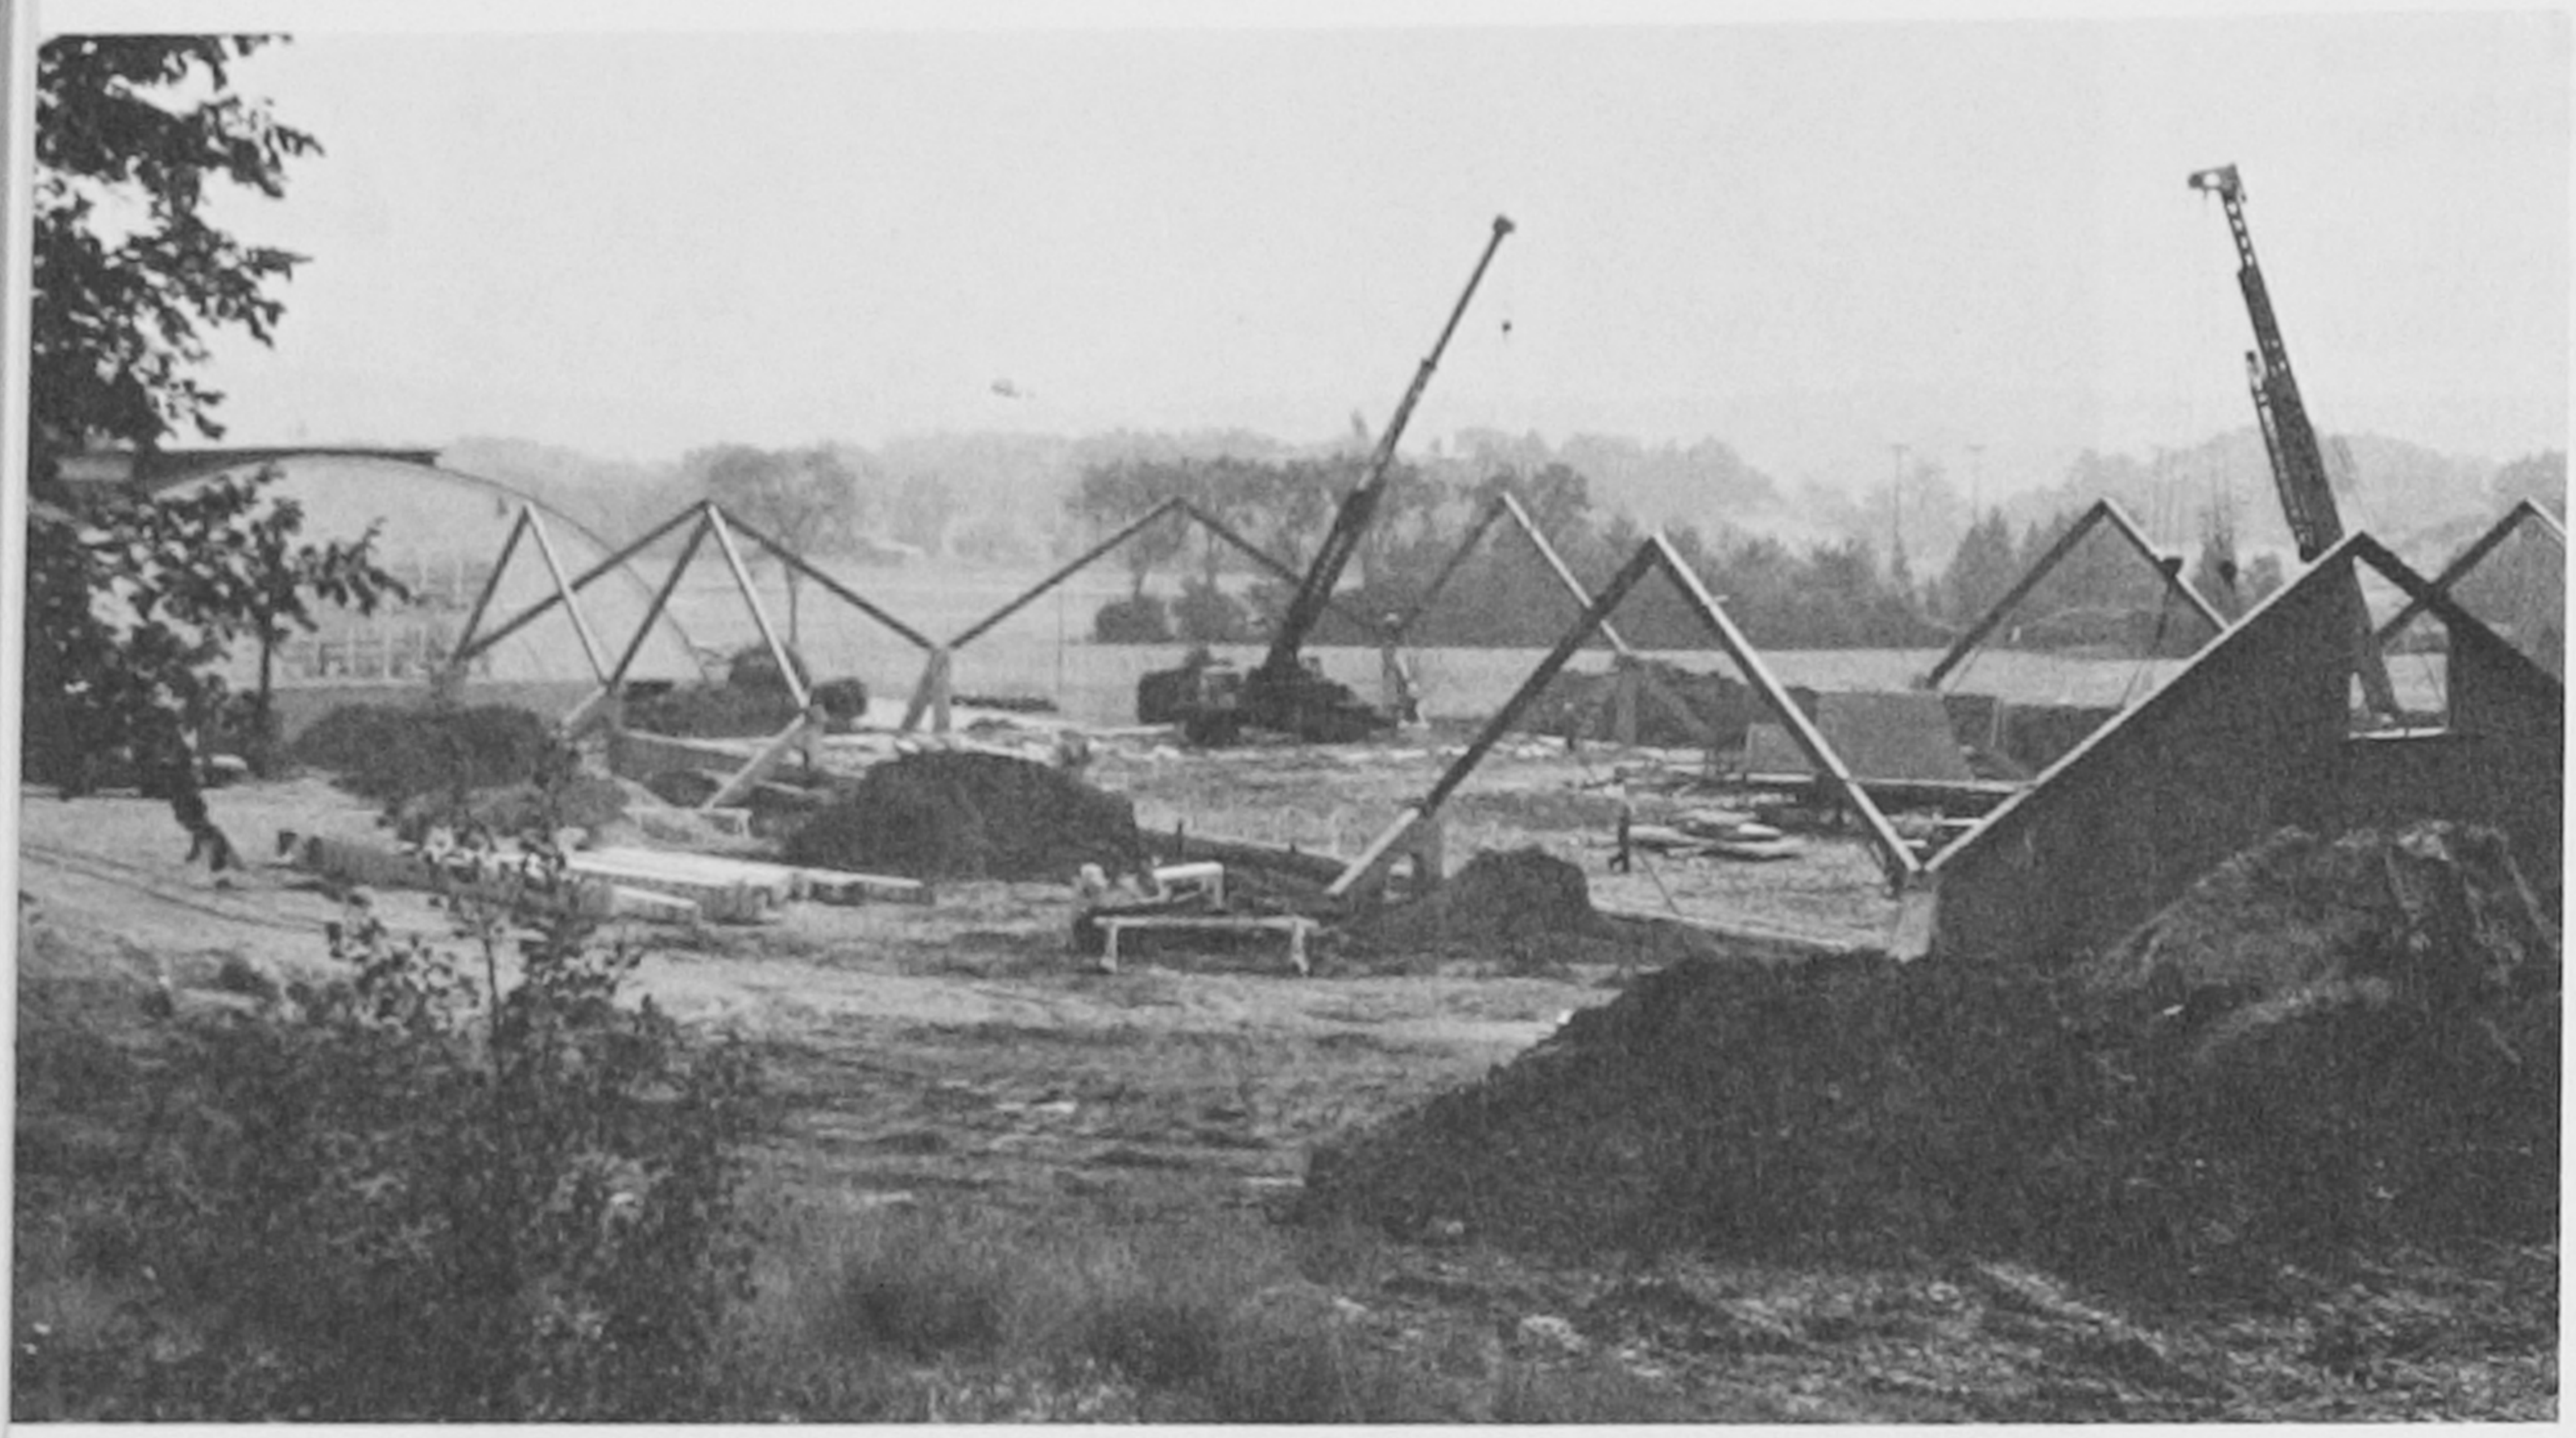


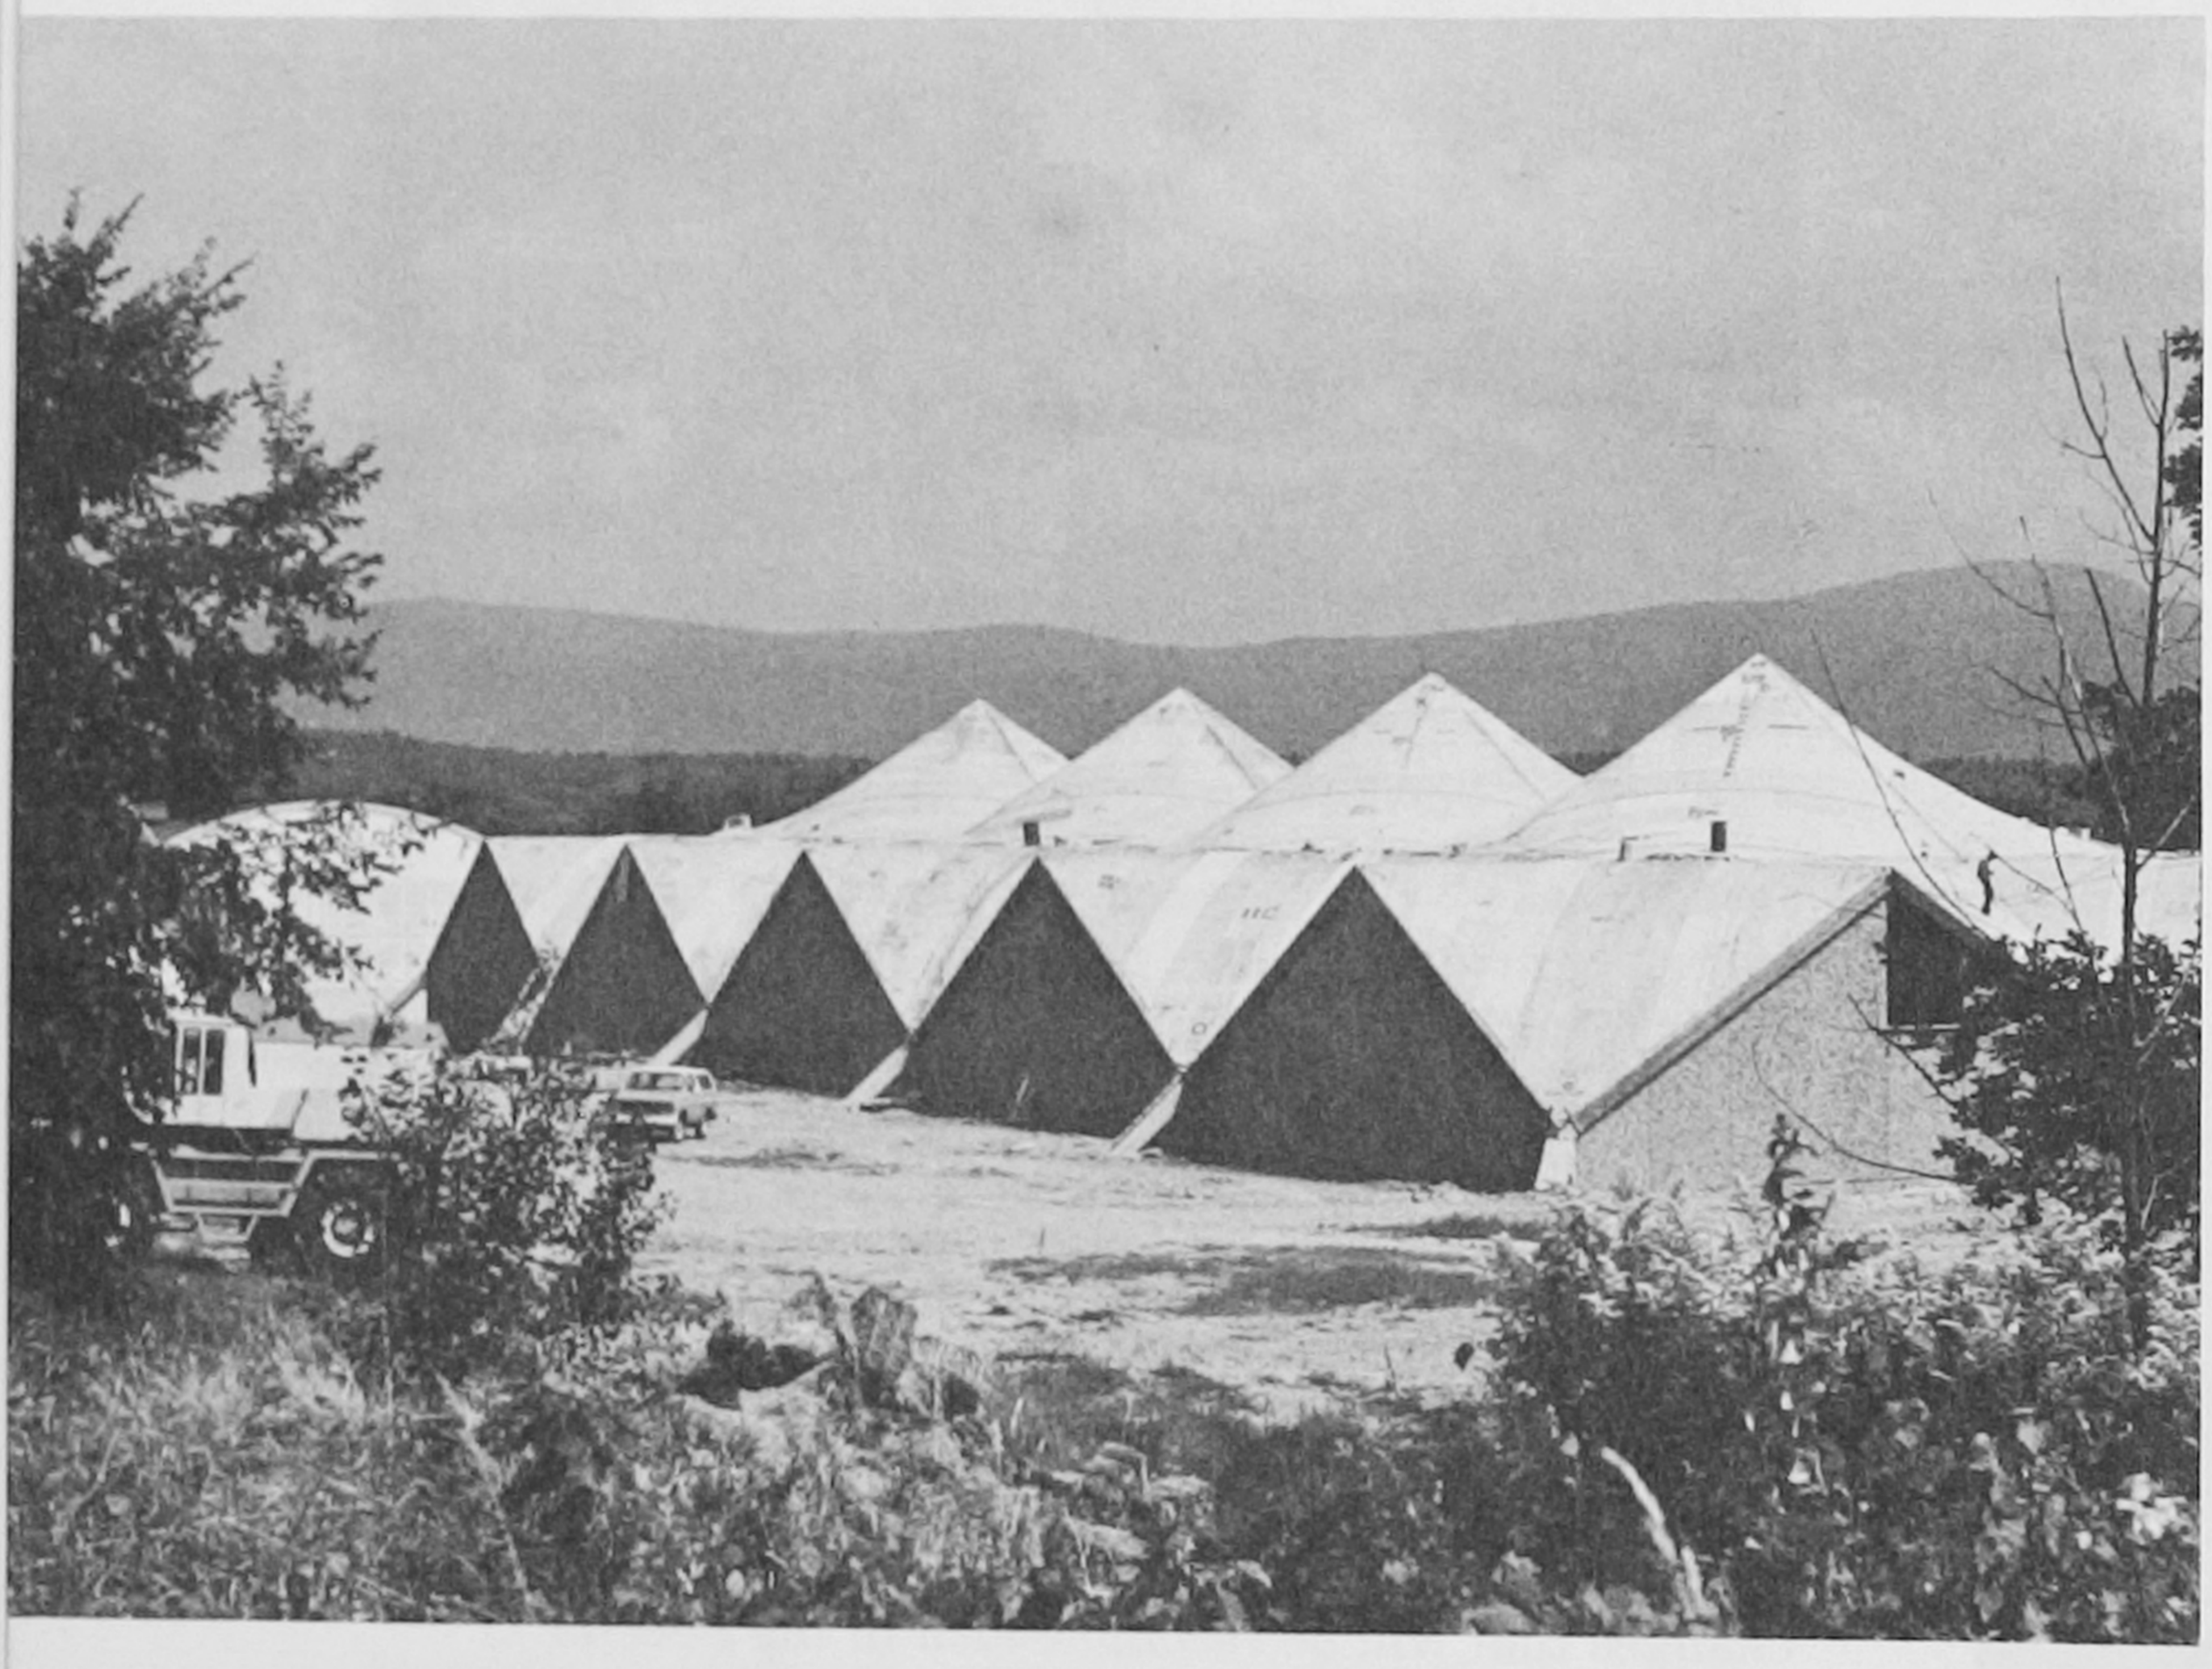
MIDDLEBURY'S

There was a palpable excitement in the community this summer as the College's indoor field with its provocative tent-like roof took shape. Grading of the site and laying of the foundation seemed to proceed slowly, but once the foundation was in place, the shell and roof went up with dramatic swiftness. Because principal elements of the structure were all prefabricated off-site and trucked to Middlebury, the pieces went together like a giant's playset and the entire exterior form was completed in only four or five weeks.

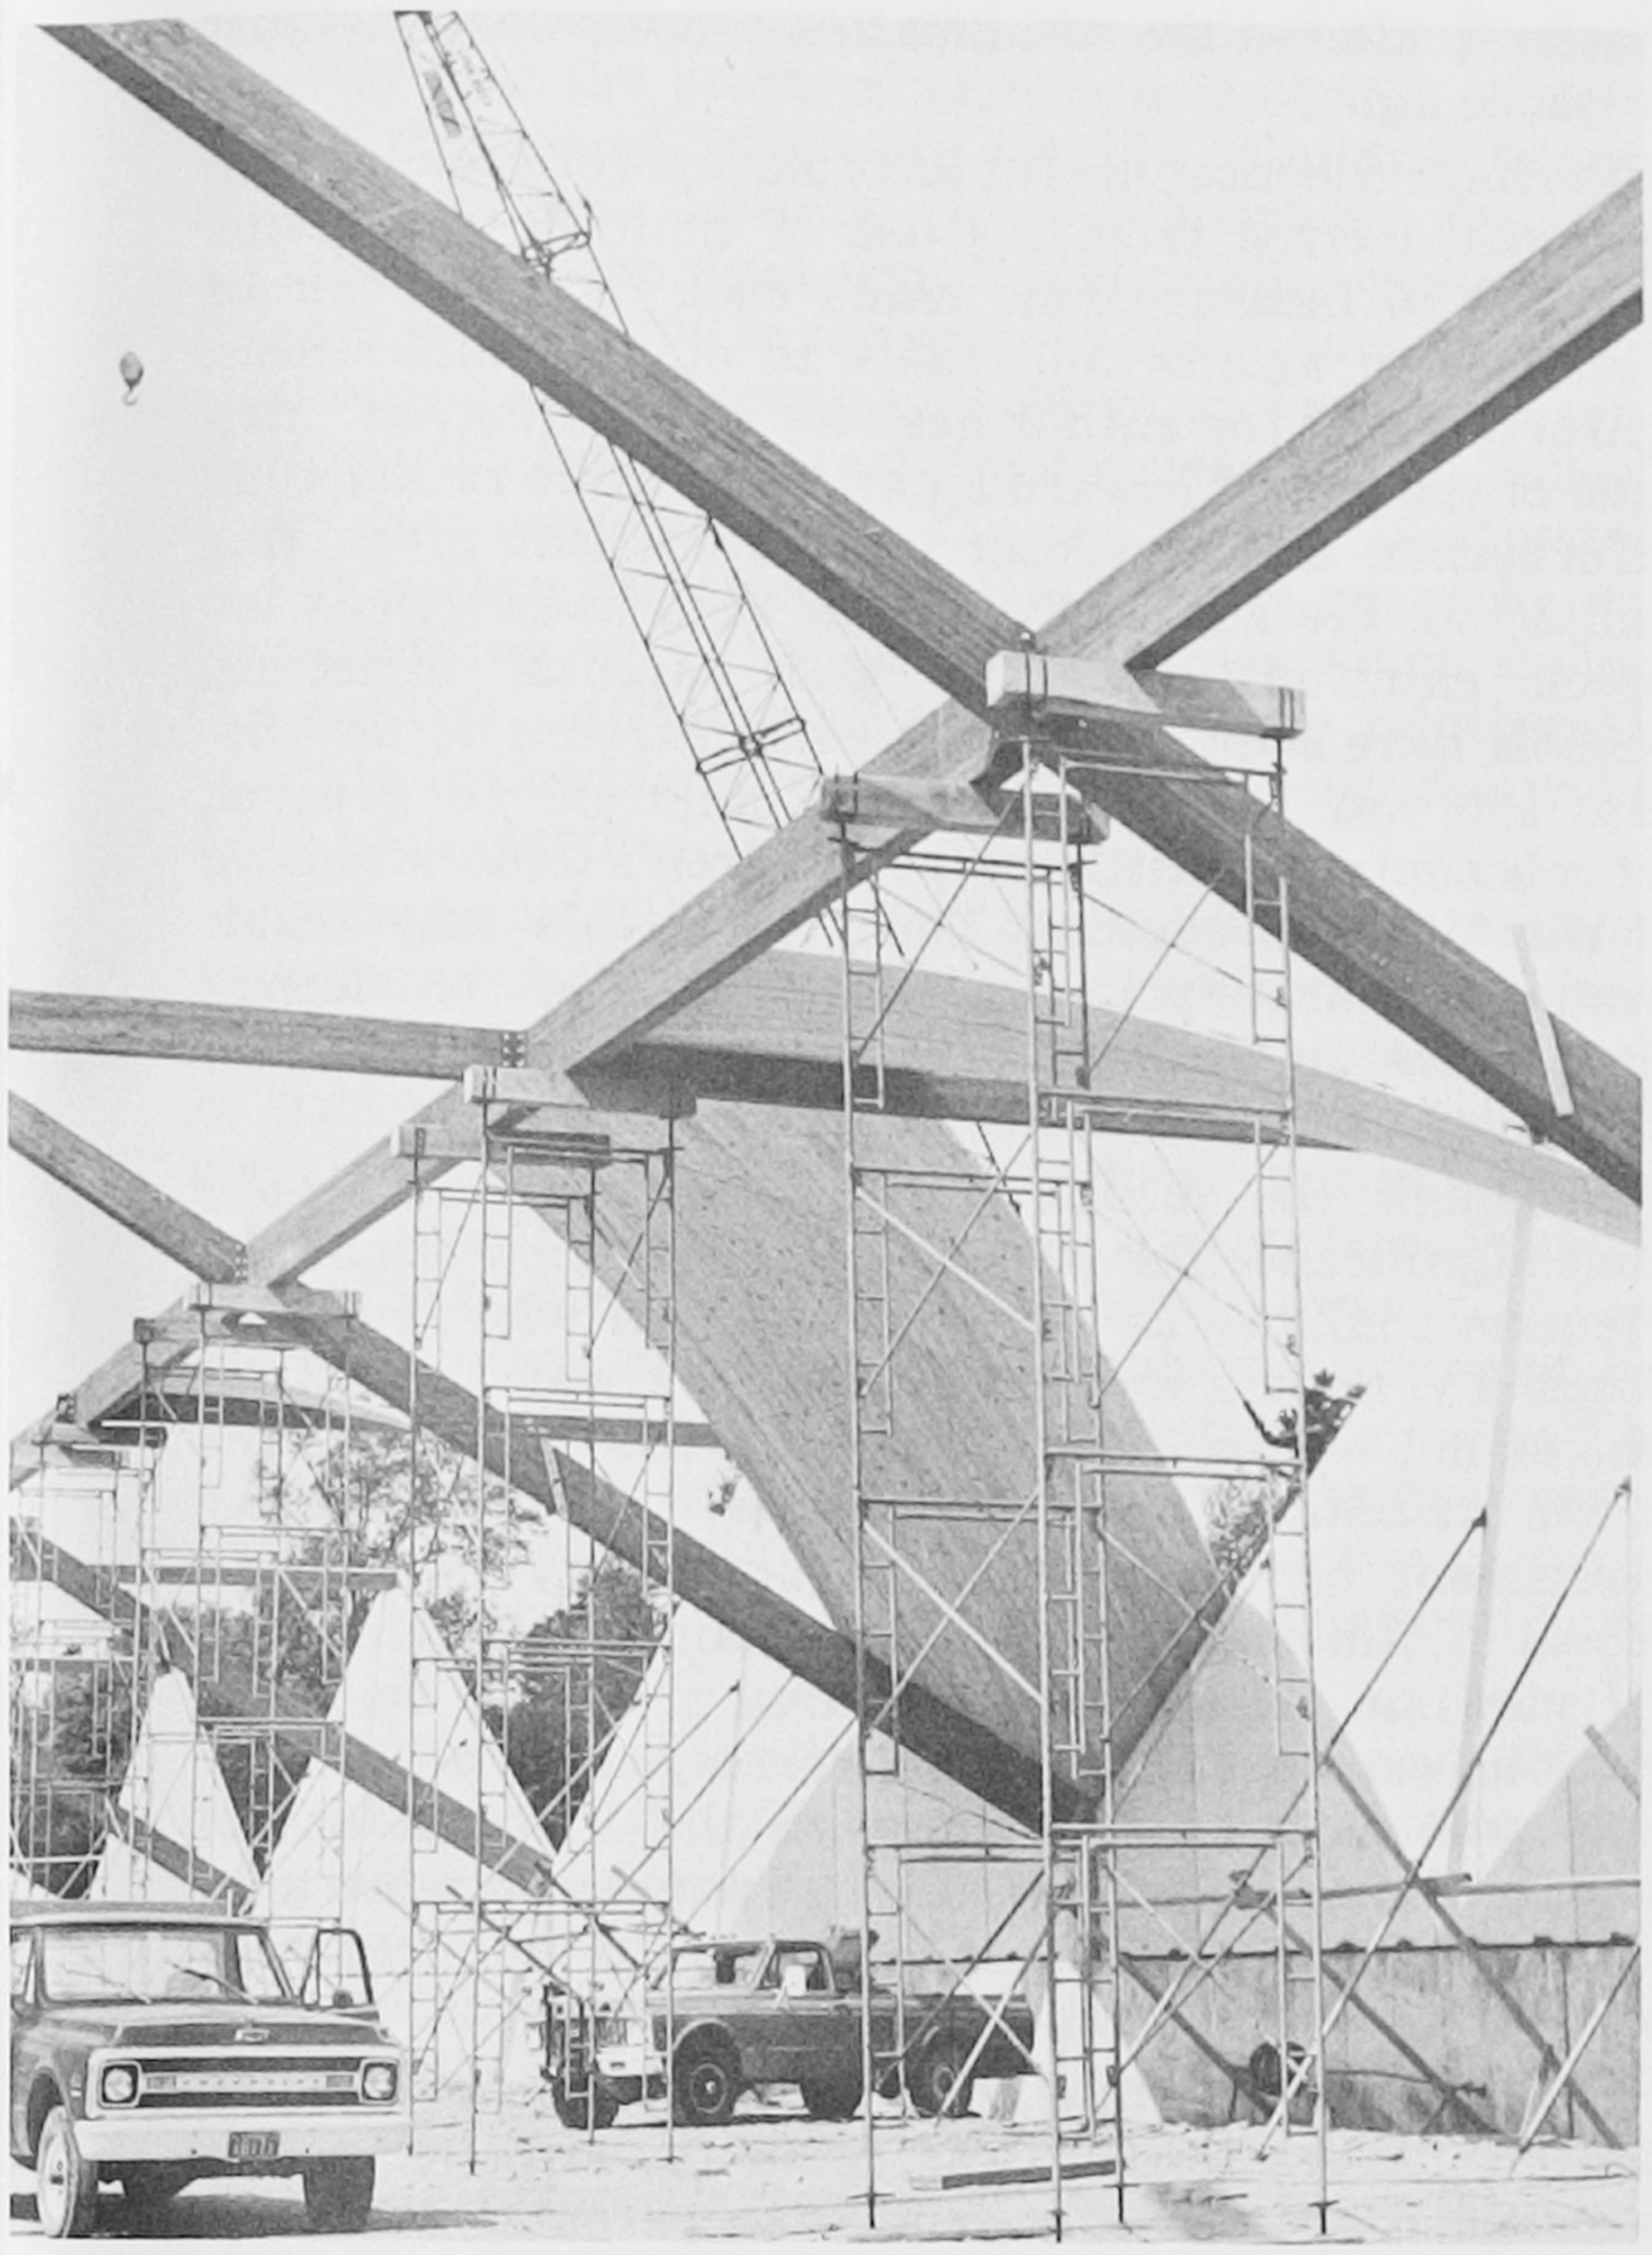
These photos report that progress in July and August. The field is expected to be open for play during the Winter Term.

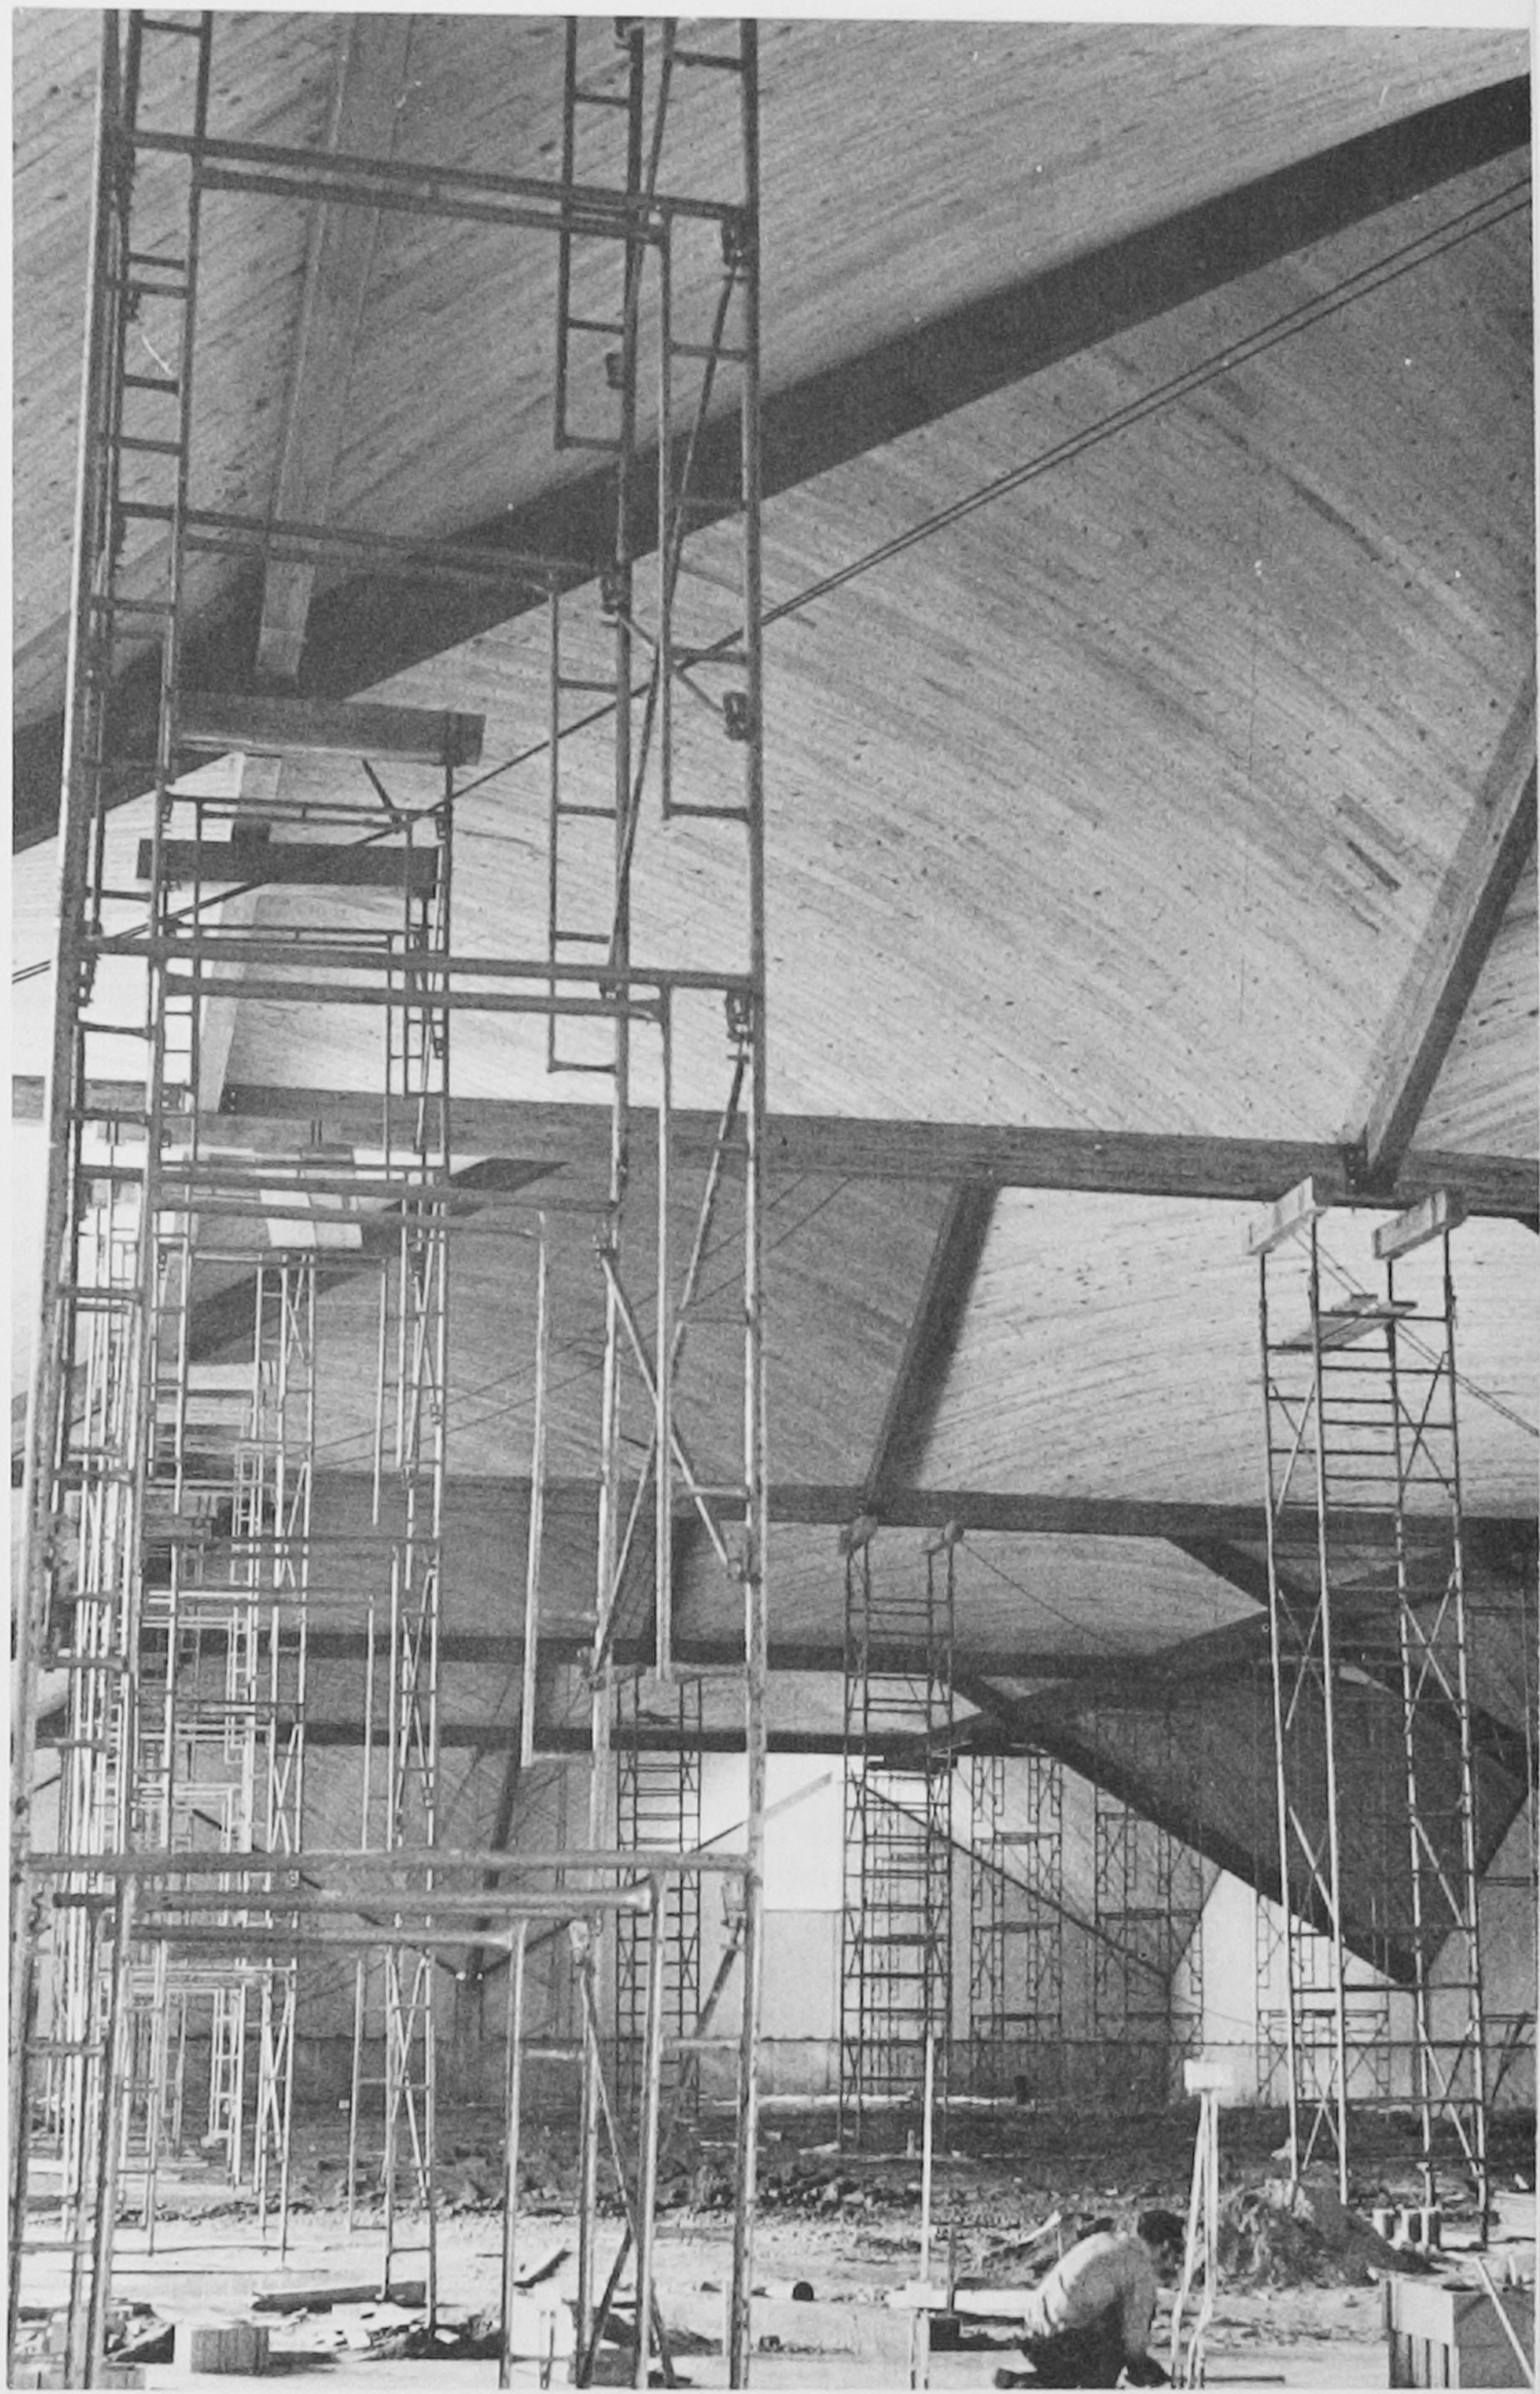
Unhappily it will open with only the macadam subsurface as a floor. No composition playing surface has yet been tested that meets Vermont state fire regulations concerning smoke toxicity and flame. Until such a material is developed by a manufacturer which meets both the needs of the College and standards of the Vermont fire code, students will play on macadam.

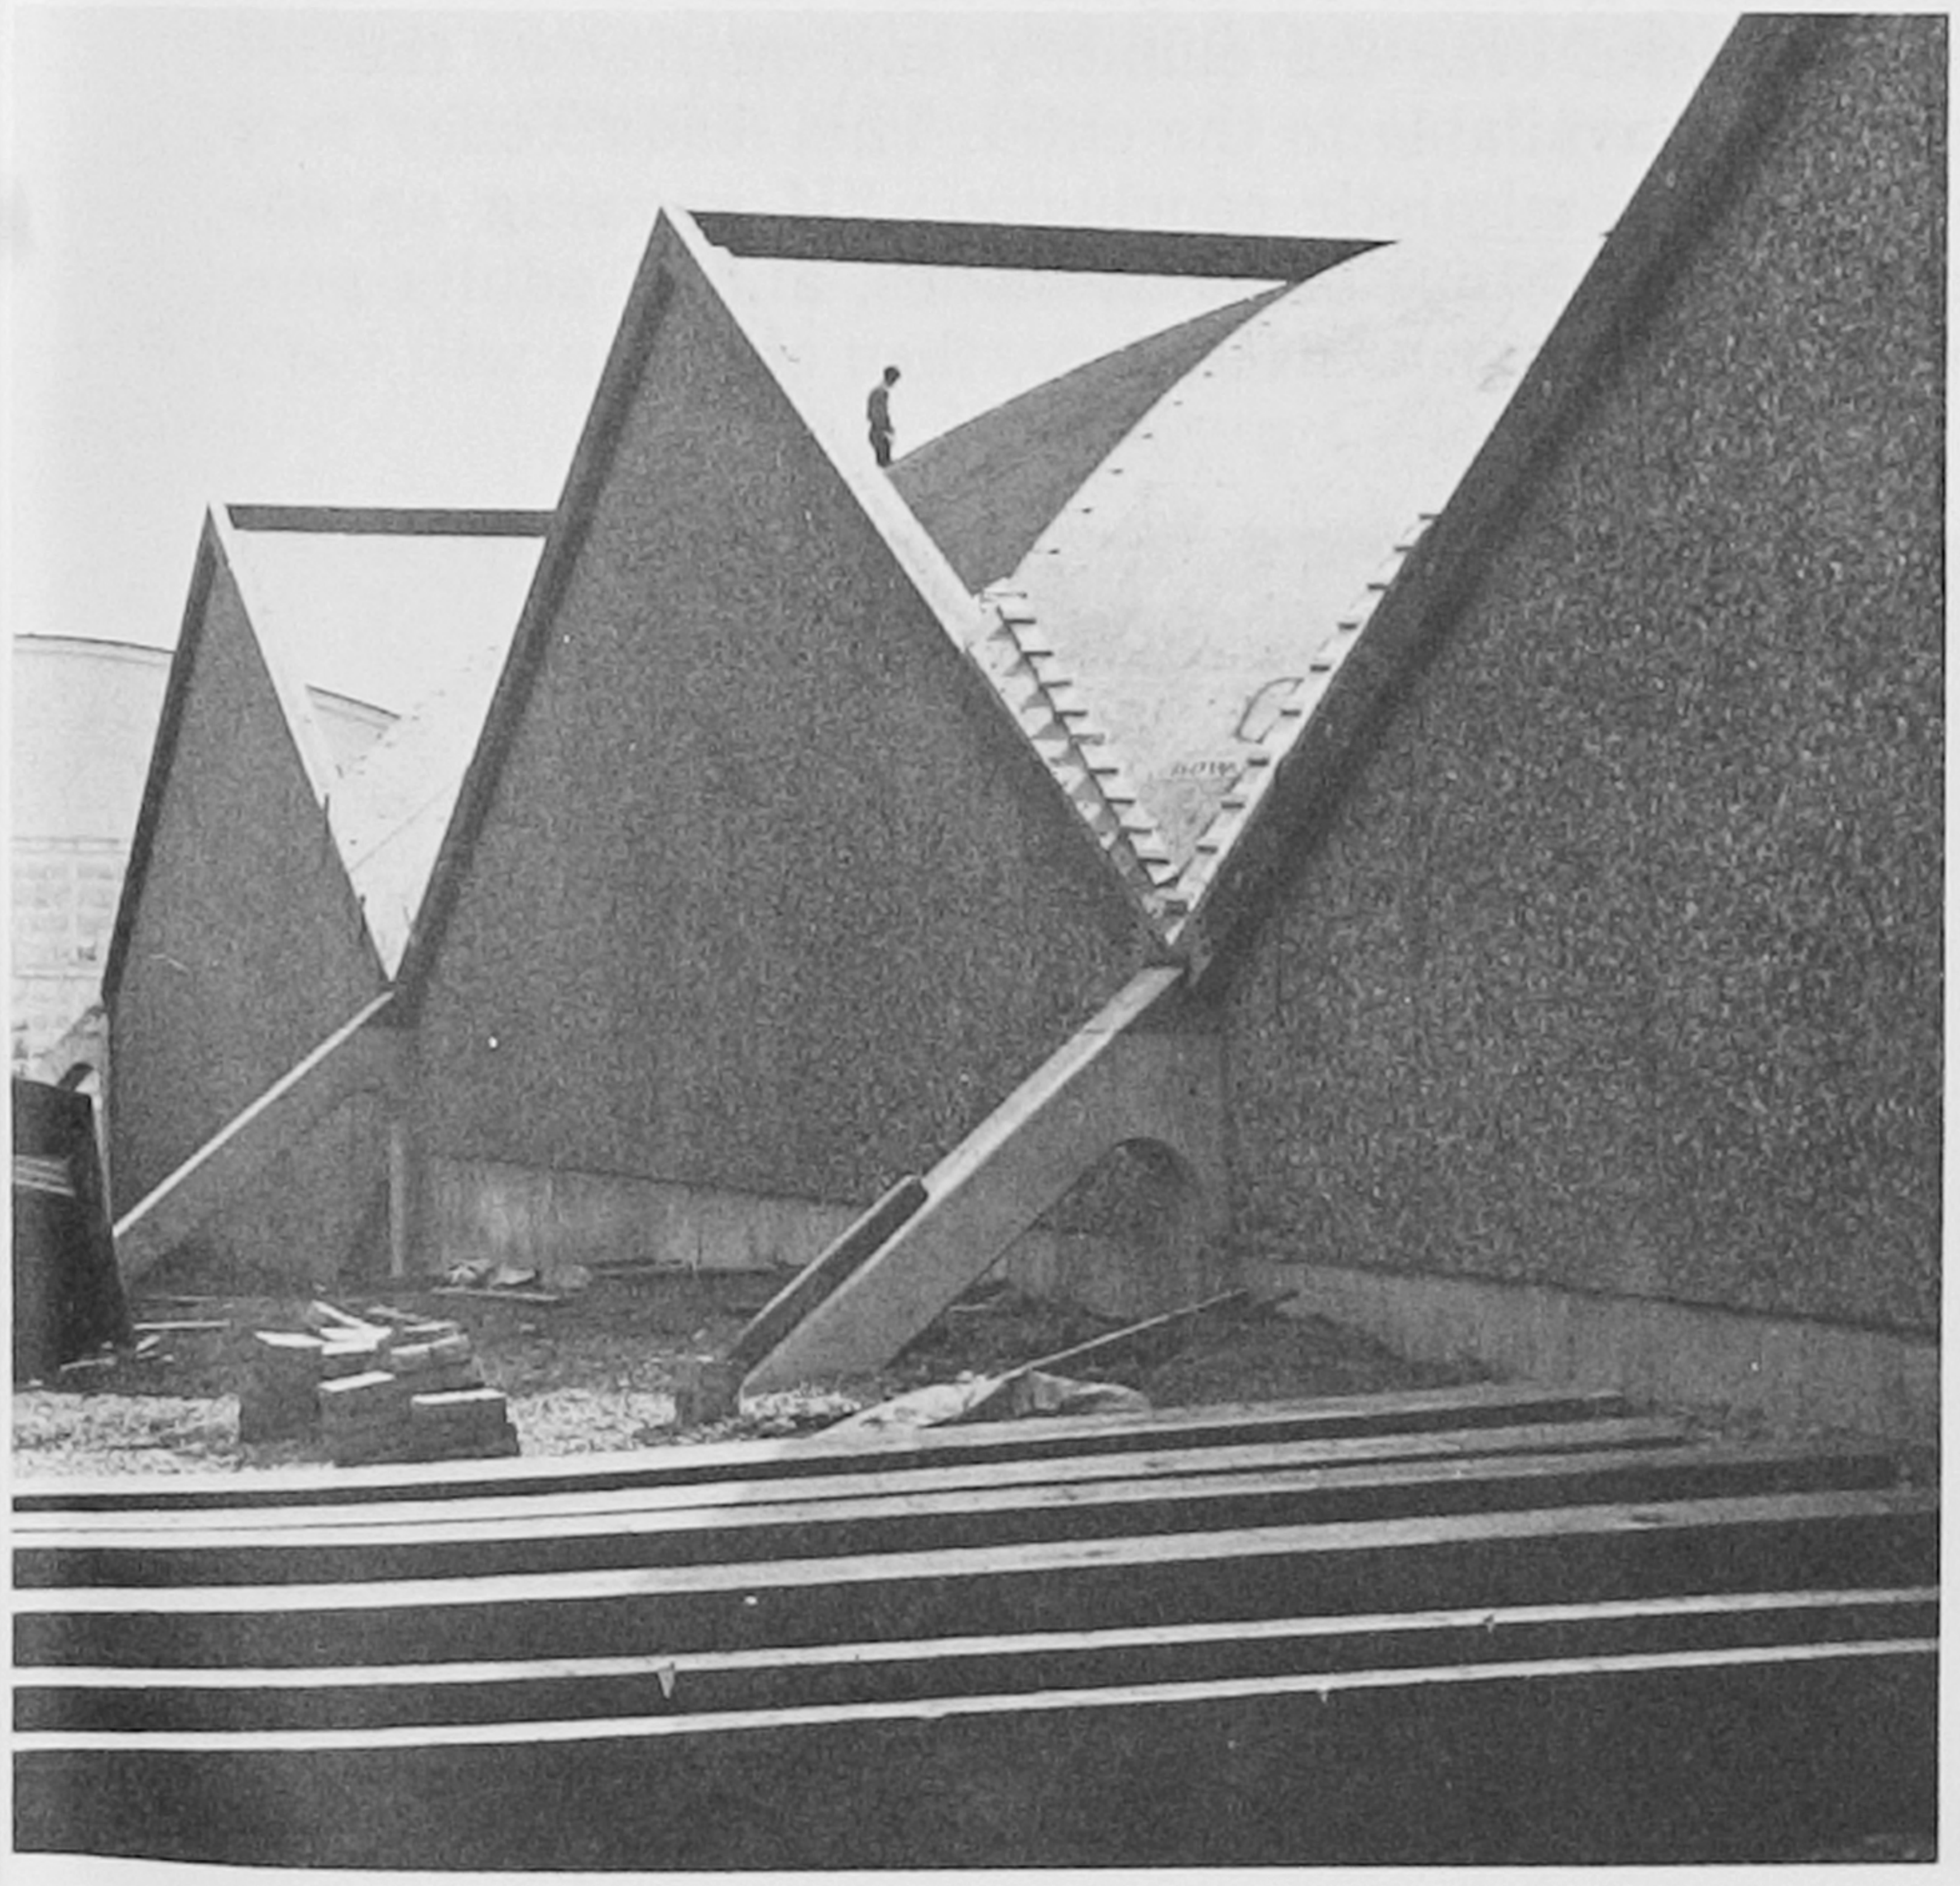




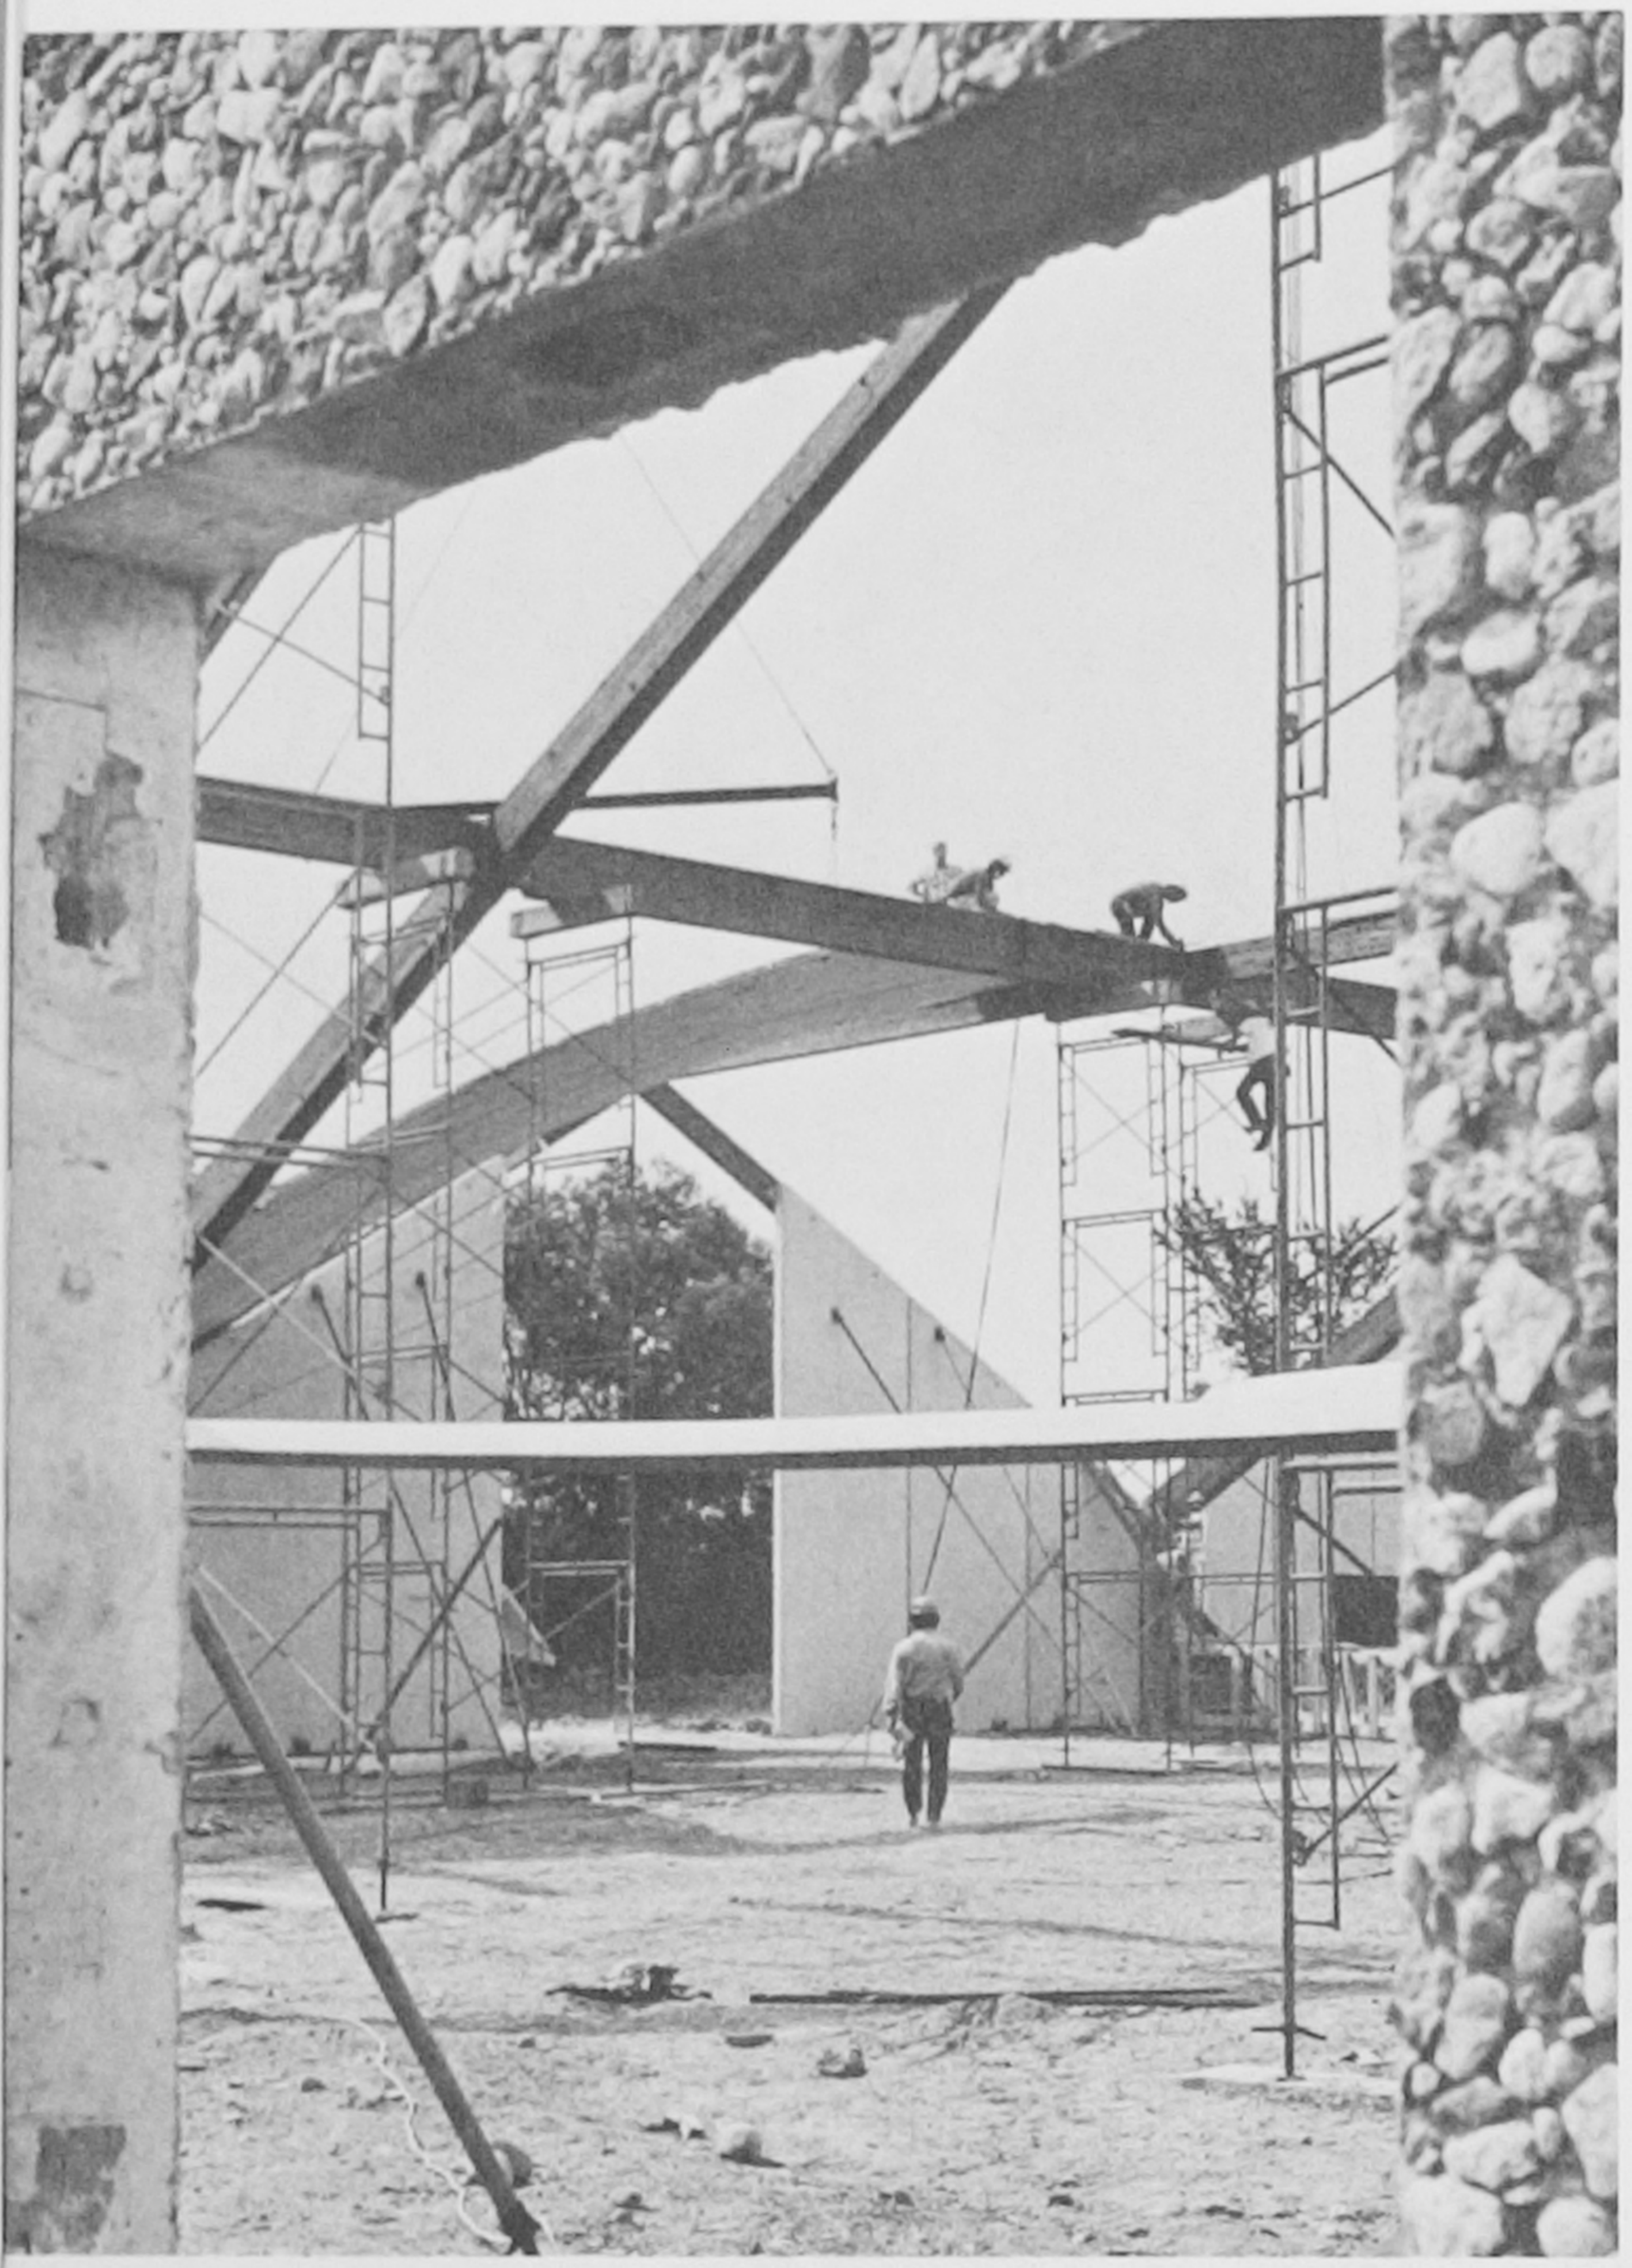
Left, the field house frame starts up in July, and 5 weeks later the roof is in place. Views are to the east. Bottom, 8 curved roof panels on the truck; plywood and tongue-and-groove-pine Dagwood was 3 inches thick.

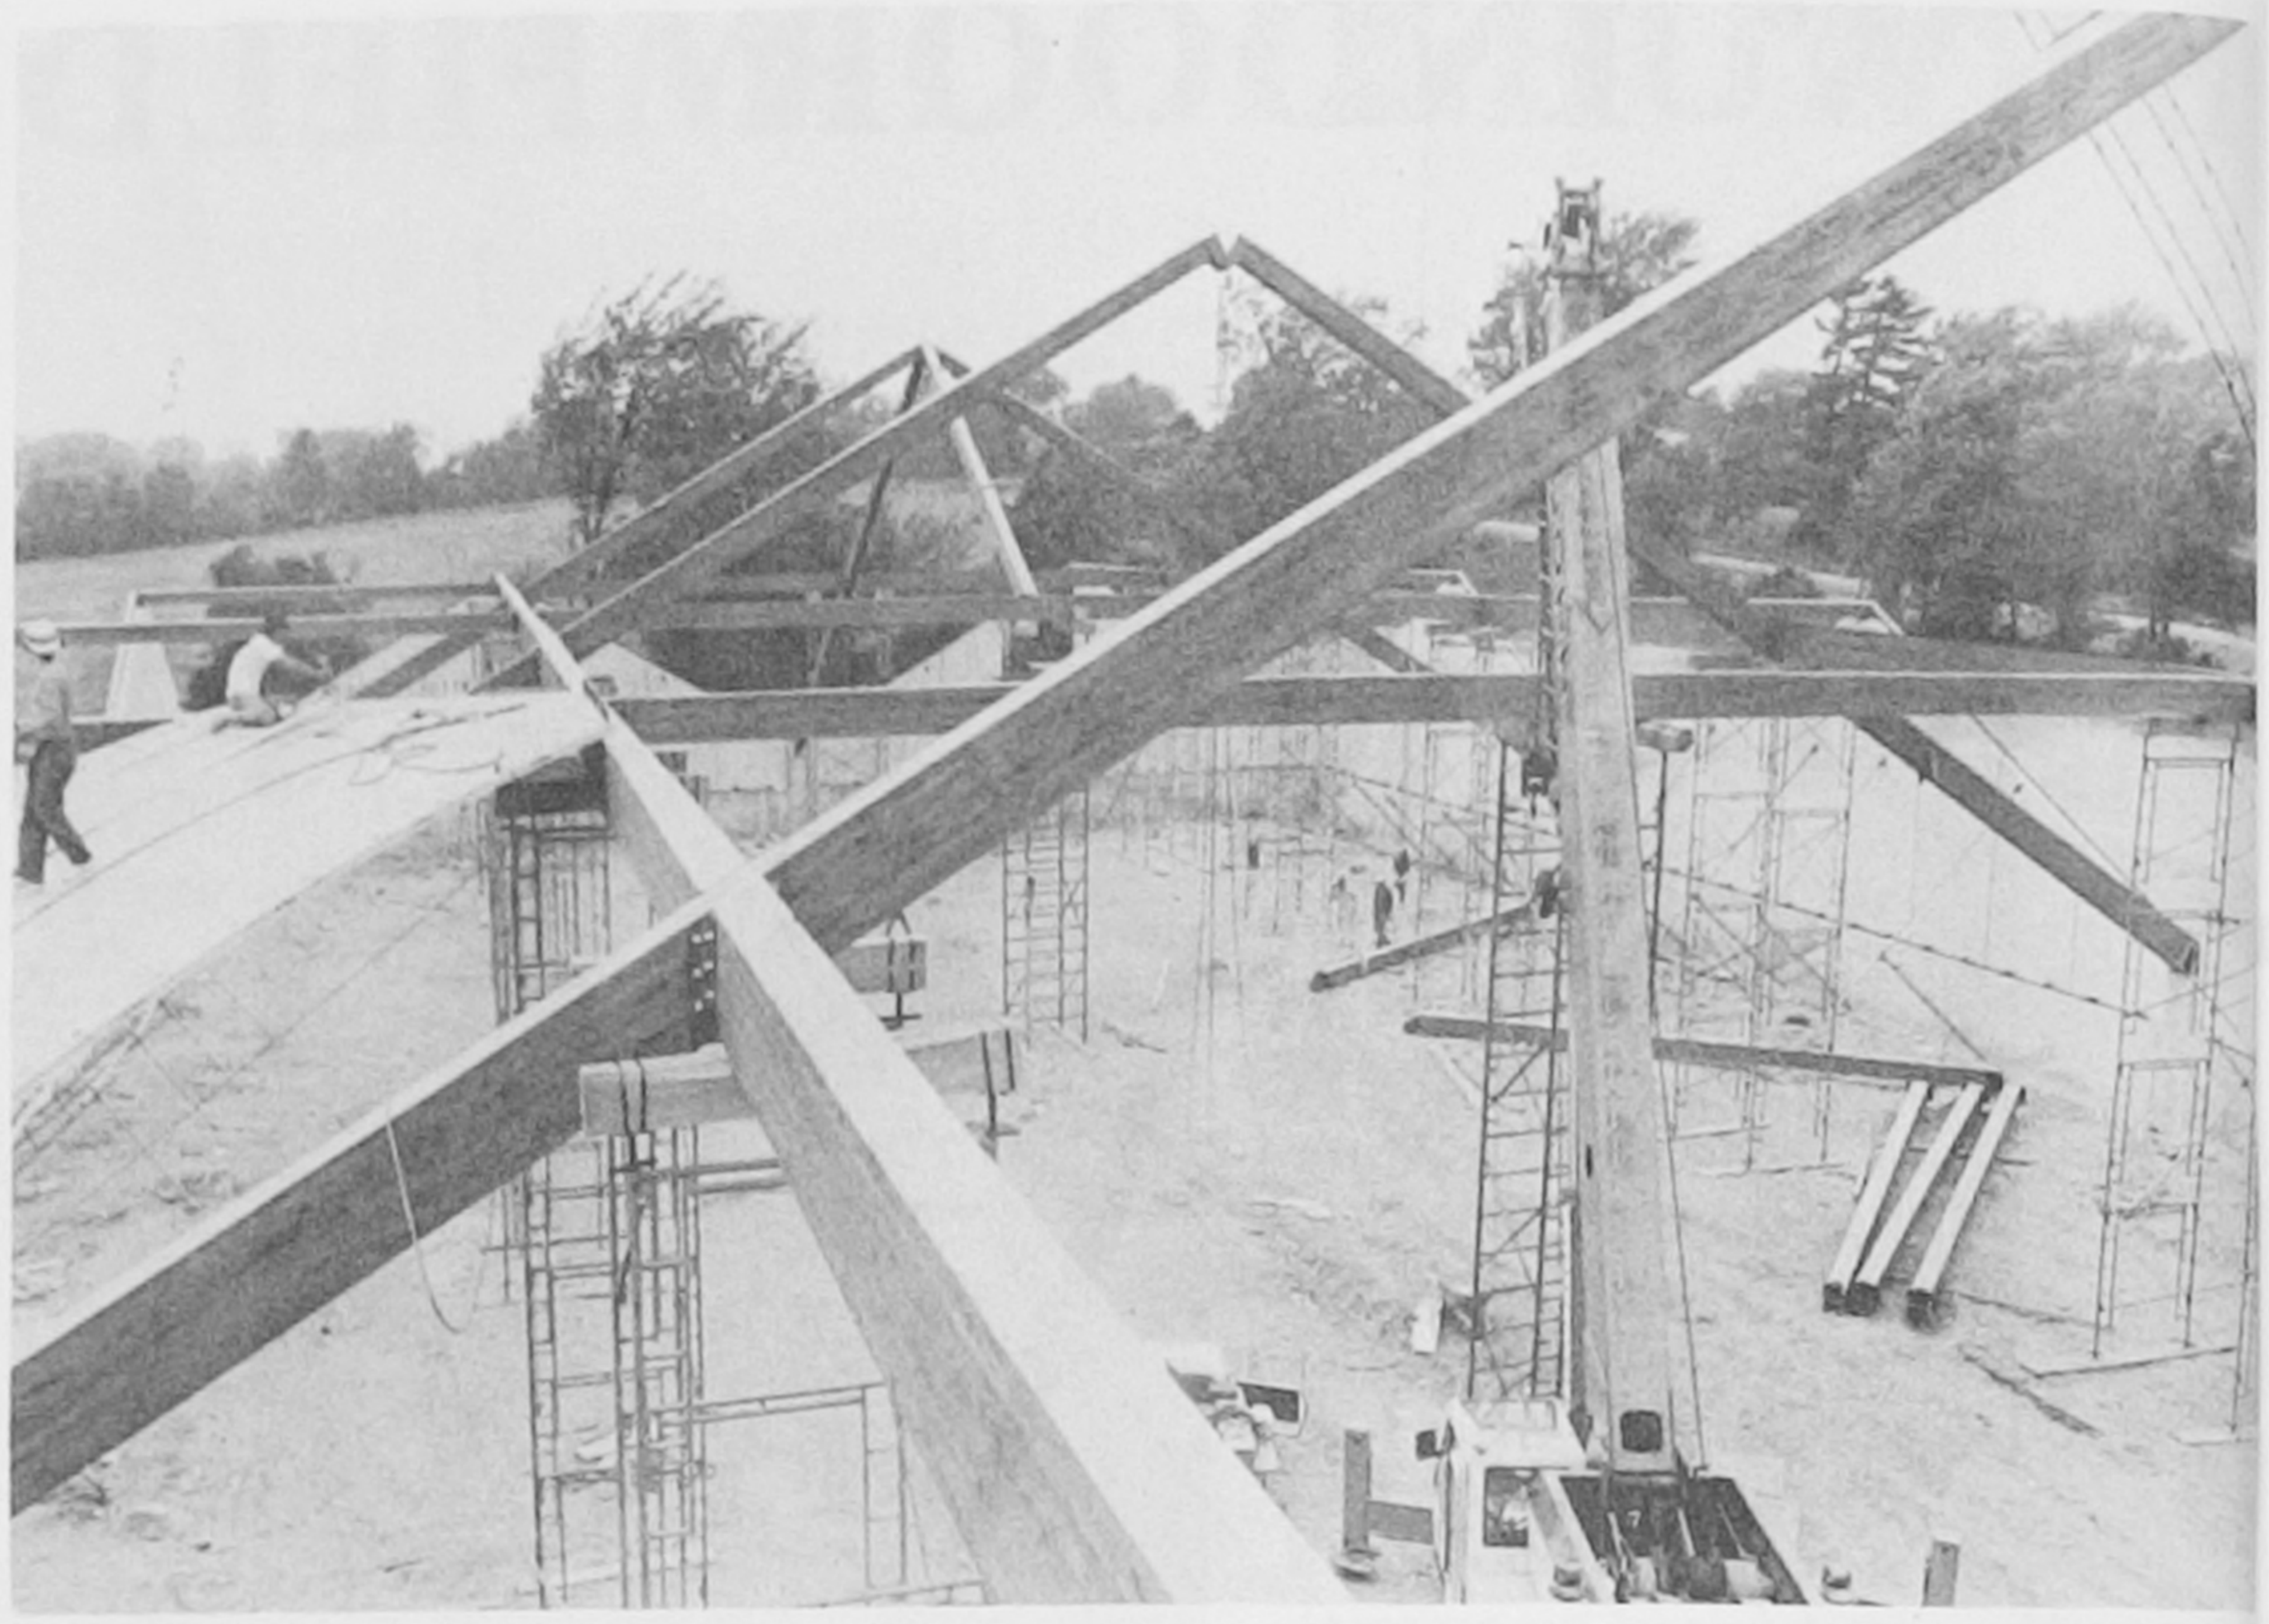




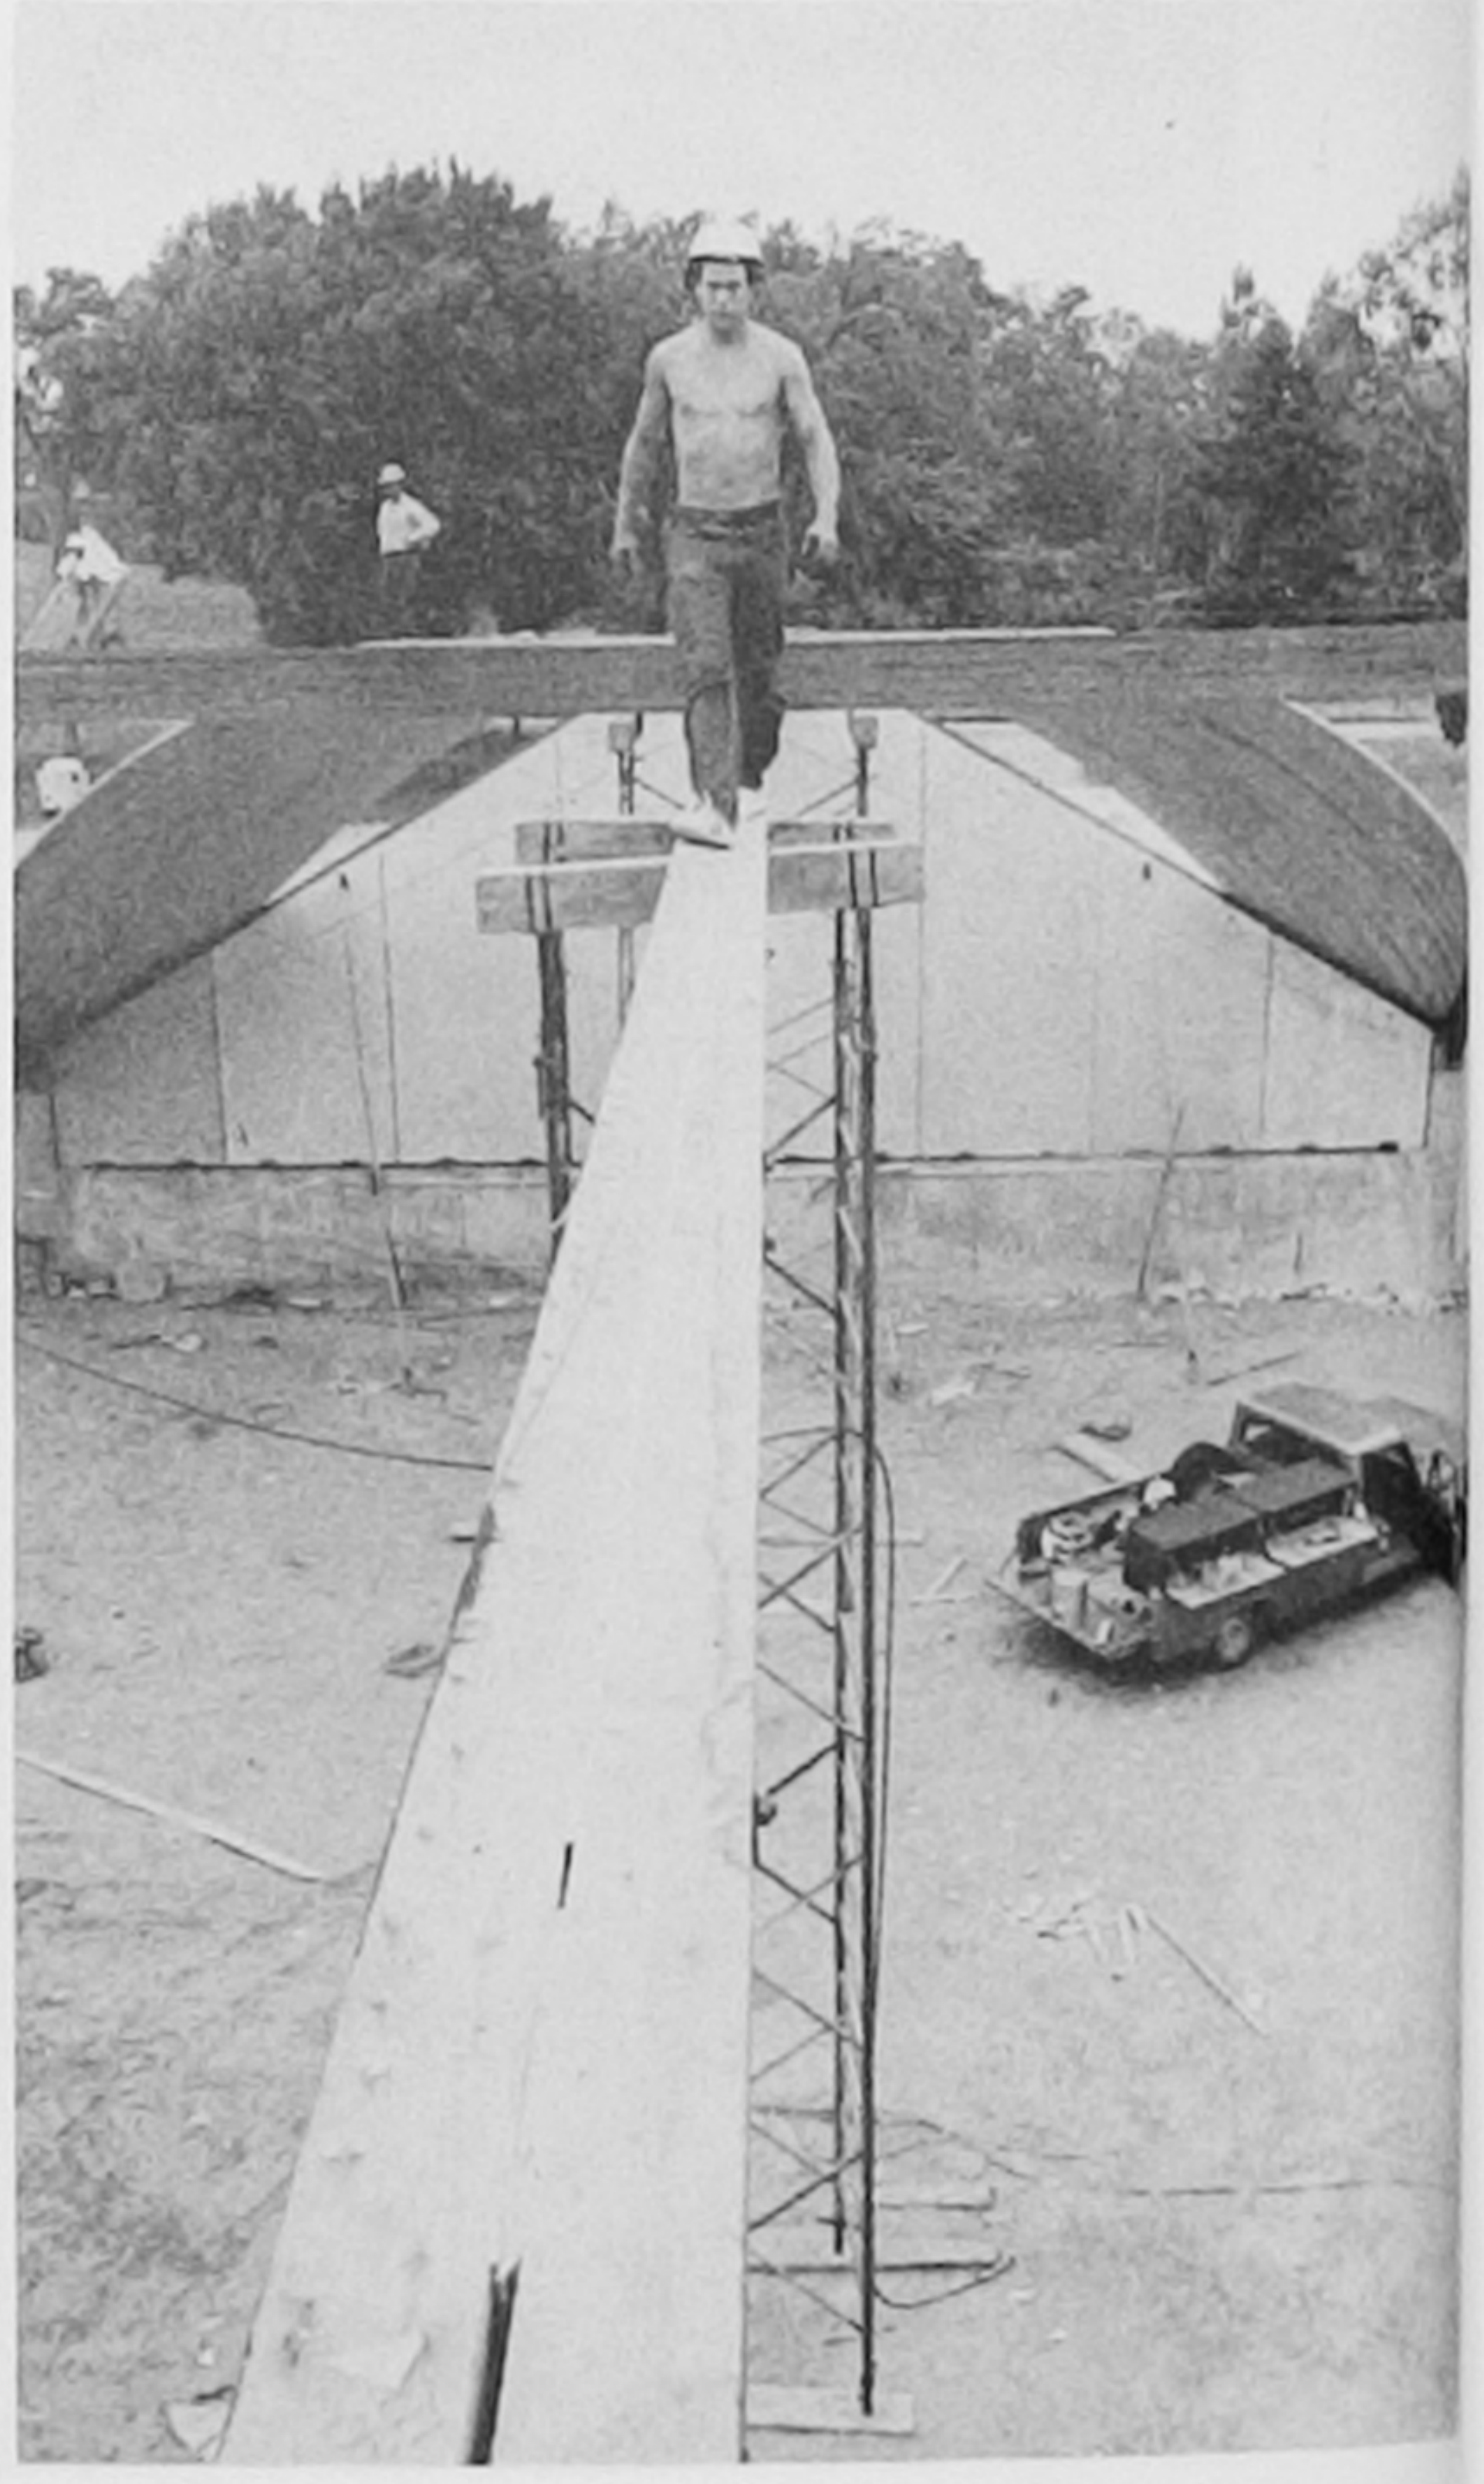


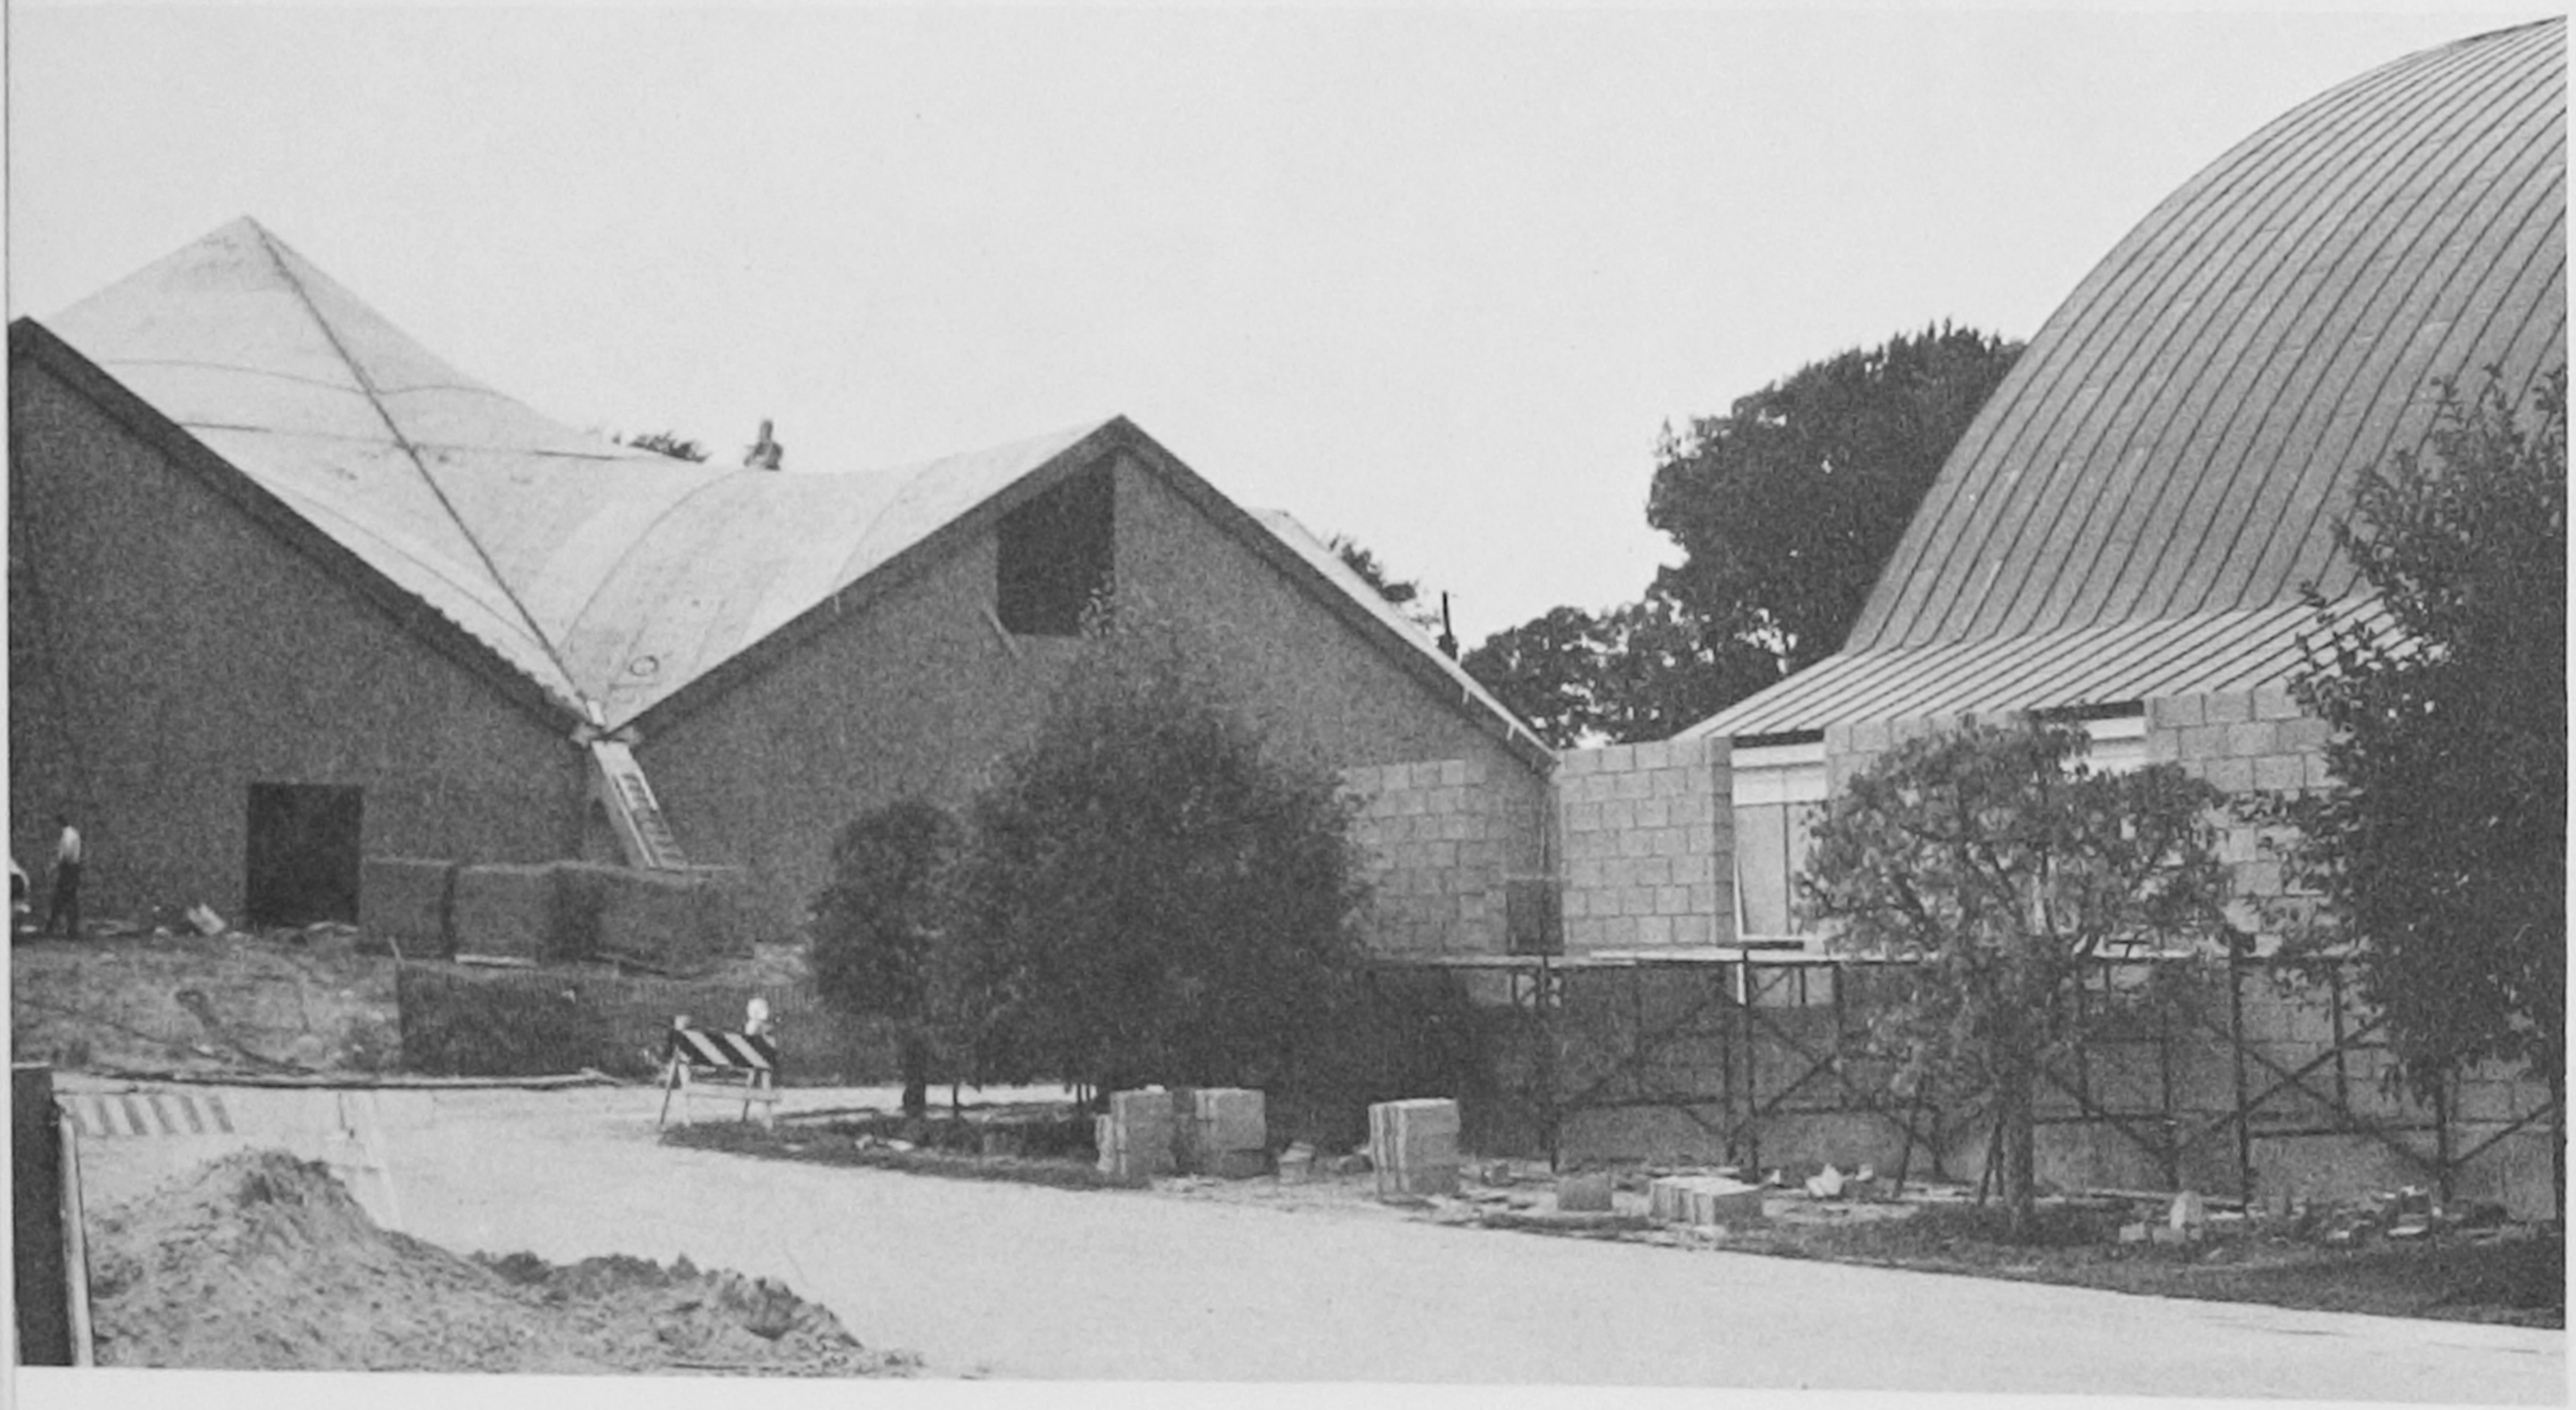
Natural pine ceiling surface, above, gives impression of a warm, tawny tent over playing area; up-sloping cables (foreground) bow each rafter outward against expected snow loads. At left first roof panels are seen in place as laminated beams are off-loaded in foreground. An estimated 18,000 six-inch lag screws, each driven home with a hand-held electric wrench, fasten panels to rafter and gable beams. Entire roof will be blanketed with styrofoam-like insulating panels before dark-tan asphalt shingles are applied.





In three scenes above, skeleton of roof is erected upon the 9-ton concrete buttresses, located one between each pair of gables, and first prefabricated curved panels are screwed in place. Peaks are 58 feet above ground. That's six-letterman Doug Arnot '72, below, former lacrosse captain and football co-captain, risking his $20,000 Middlebury baccalaureate on the high beam. Below left, the new cement-block hallway, right, being added to rear of Memorial Field House will connect by a passage to door in new facility, left background. High opening in other gable is air intake for huge heater-blower that will warm indoor field to 55 degrees in winter.





At both the beginning and the end of the book we are told that the practical significance of this study is that early formed beliefs are durable. "Children become the leaders who initiate, the public which approves, and the men who fight wars". Yet public opinion polls from the late 1960s to the present have indicated sharp cleavages between young and old on war-related issues. Perhaps the lack of more dramatic cleavages in Tolley's study is a consequence of the age group investigated. If the author had tried to relate the age group he was investigating with the wealth of studies which explore the political attitudes of adolescents, the relationship of early formed attitudes to later adult attitudes would have been clarified.

Methodologically the study has numerous limitations as so many such studies have. The size and composition of the sample, as well as the refusals of certain schools to participate, leave the findings open to error or incompleteness. Ideally a longitudinal design, as the author mentions, would be more appropriate. What is refreshing about this particular book, however, is that the limitations of design and sample are apparent because the author clearly draws attention to them. The strengths of the methodology, such as the test-retest design for reliability and the correction for response set, makes this study a useful tool in understanding research of this kind.

Children and War is a well-organized and clearly presented scientific study of how children develop their early attitudes toward war. In an age when the consequences of violent acts are so visible all around us, it becomes paramount that we try to understand how and why people come to perceive war as the best way to solve differences. As with so much adult behavior, the seeds are often planted early in childhood. Through research efforts such as this, it may eventually be possible to minimize those conditions conducive to the formation of warlike attitudes and to nurture those which promote peaceful attitudes.

THE ECONOMICS OF AIRBORNE EMISSION. THE CASE FOR AN AIR RIGHTS MARKET. By Douglas R. Mackintosh '67, New York, Praeger, 1973, 85 pp., $13.50.

How is it that I cannot dump my garbage on my neighbor's lot, but Petroleum Refiners Anonymous, upwind from me, can dump their garbage into the air I live in?

The question of what one might do about this anomaly is at the center of this meticulously careful and highly technical little book.

To get back to the question: I might bargain with my neighbor and conceivably bribe him with some payment to permit me to dump a carefully specified amount of a carefully specified type of garbage in a certain spot over a defined period of time. Petroleum Refiners Anonymous, (P.R.A.), however, does not bargain with me, nor does it try to bribe me with payment so as to make me put up with their dumping into my air. The reason is, it isn't my air. It isn't theirs either, of course; it's everybody's air, and, as you well know, what belongs to everybody belongs to nobody.

Now, the notion that I might bribe my neighbor into letting me dump on his lawn is, of course, preposterous. In other words, the price he would charge would be infinitely high. My lawn, or his lawn, is inviolate. But with air and water we do not need to be quite so nasty particular. After all, merely by living and metabolizing, not to mention our other activities, we all generate some pollution; we find that quite tolerable because we know that air (and water) can tolerate some pollution. Unconsciously and implicitly we have in mind some "optimum" level of pollution, somewhere between the one extreme of forcing people to stop living altogether and the other, of letting them dump anything they please in any amount. The notion of an "optimum level of pollution" sounds, at first blush, like anathema to anybody who went to college in Vermont; nevertheless, let's face it, that is what, in our muddled way, we have in mind when we think about these things. "No need to go to extremes," as they say.

The fact that things have been going to extremes, to ever-more-intolerable air pollution, is the impetus to

CHILDREN AND WAR: Political Socialization to International Conflict By Howard Tolley, Jr. '65 (New York: Teachers College Press, 1973. 196 pp., cloth $9.50, paperback $4.95)

In this clear well-organized report, Howard Tolley, Jr., states the results of a study about the way children develop attitudes and acquire information about war. His three main objectives are, to determine how and when children develop attitudes toward war in general and the Vietnam war in particular; to assess the extent of the child's factual knowledge about the Vietnam War; and finally, to indicate the relative importance of various sources of the children's attitudes and information . . . that is, which agent, the family, the school, the church or the media, seems to be most influential in producing the child's attitude about war.

A questionnaire survey of some 3,000 children, aged 7 to 15 years, was conducted in January-March, 1971. Questions dealing with general attitudes toward war comprise what the author calls the "war acceptance scale." A second scale called the "Vietnam acceptance scale" includes only questions dealing with this conflict. In addition, questions about the Vietnam conflict were included to test the child's knowledge of the war. Most of the tables and discussions center about the effects of a variety of social variables on the child's scores on these various scales.

The more interesting findings deal with variations in opinion associated with differences in race, sex, social class, and age. For instance, the author found that black children are consistently less accepting of war and of the Vietnam conflict than white children are. He attributes this finding to early disaffection due to deprivation and inequity: "Alienated by disproportionate costs borne for an unpopular cause, children of the black minority lose confidence in the President and learn to oppose the war at an early age."

Sex did not seem to discriminate as readily as previous studies had led the author to expect. He suggests that this "may . . . reflect recent changes in social custom and child rearing practices which allow girls greater freedom of expression". Unfortunately sexist socialization may still exist, for in a later chapter the author reports that, with increasing age, girls and boys show sharp differences in factual knowledge about war "suggesting that the contrast might become even more pronounced by late adolescence".

Less surprising, perhaps, given the high visibility of student demonstrators, children from the highest social status expressed the greatest support for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam. Also, opposition to the war increased with the increased age of the child. In general Tolley finds that the skepticism evidenced by young children, today, is quite different from that reported in the early 1960s; he feels "that an unpopular foreign war and widespread public opposition to it have dramatically altered the socialization process observed just a decade ago".

Perhaps the most useful information for socialization research derives from his use of multiple regression analysis to measure how much each of a number of socialization agents contribute to opinion differences. Unfortunately the author has only the "perceived" attitude of the parent toward a particular issue rather than information directly from the parent. But given this limitation, the author finds very high associations between children's attitudes and parental attitudes. Schools have some effect only when parents do not discuss the war in front of their children. In general, schools contribute little to the children's understanding of the Vietnam conflict. Tolley feels this may result from a deliberate policy of "protection" or "shielding" plus a fear on the part of school administrators that they might polarize the community.

Although the media, particularly television, have some significance for what the children know about the Vietnam conflict—as expected, children who regularly watch TV news know more about the war than those who do not—nevertheless, television has little influence on the attitudes of the children toward the war. Neither assessment of the President's credibility nor disapproval of American policy in Vietnam seems related to TV viewing. When asked, children generally felt that opinions expressed on the air corresponded with their own outlooks. "Those highest on the Vietnam acceptance scale . . . felt the media had expressed more support for victory while those lowest on the scale reported hearing more criticism of the war".

On balance, parental influence seems more significant. Attitudes toward war, with or without factual knowledge, are strongly related to parental attitudes. And even where some knowledge may be derived from the media, it could be argued that parents may have much control over the quantity and quality of the information available to the child. This leads Tolley to a somewhat pessimistic conclusion: "If growing up entails an acceptance of adult values, and if adults generally accept war as necessary, then children will too".

Religion Conference

Gentlemen:

I was very disappointed to note that your summer edition contained no mention of the 1973 Middlebury Religion Conference, held in March. My disappointment is that your readers missed the opportunity to read of a Middlebury-sponsored and organized academic conference. The Religion Conference was organized by students in 1953 and, through a generous offer by Mr. Don Mitchell, endowed in 1957. This year's Conference discussed, "In the Aftermath: The Meaning of Viet Nam for America," a particularly vital concern of importance to all members of the Middlebury community in light of the recent peace settlement.

The organizers of the Conference brought to campus two lecturers of exceptionally high quality. Dr. Chaim Shatan, a noted New York psychoanalyst, spoke on "The Grief of Soldiers," an account of the widespread psychological dislocation of many Viet Nam veterans. Shatan indicated that the extent of the problem was far more extensive than generally realized, and remarked that the U.S. government and Americans in general are remiss in fulfilling their obligations to the veterans. Dr. Daniel Migliore, a theologian at Princeton Theological Seminary lectured on "The Moral Crisis in the Aftermath." Migliore spoke of American death-denial, of a "frightening indifference to the suffering and death which American military power continues to inflict on the people of Southeast Asia." In so doing, Migliore claimed, Americans also violate their own humanity.

The Conference conducted a student-faculty panel symposium with the two guest lecturers, and all events of the Conference were reasonably well-attended. The Middlebury General Catalogue lists the Conference as one of the important events of the academic year. Yet a student-faculty spelling bee and an article on trees on campus took precedence over this event in your magazine. It indicates to me, and others with whom I have spoken, a myopic vision of the College. I am sure that alumni are interested in reading a well-balanced version of activities carried on by current Middlebury students.

the innumerable studies to which Mackintosh makes his quite original contribution. Ways must be found to apportion the limited absorptive capacity of an airshed (or watershed) to all the users in such a way as to maximize the well-being of all.

Look at it this way: if we insist on very clean air, we must force PRA to stop dumping whatever it is that their stacks dump, altogether. In which case we would have to do without the refinery products—gasoline, heating oil, naphthalene etc. etc.—that they produce. We would also have to curtail the operation of automobiles, diesel trucks, power stations and so on. If we permit a limited amount of pollution, we hit ourselves in the pocketbook: clean production, wherever possible, tends to be more expensive than dirty production.

Since, by and large, all of us want to eat our cake and have it too (despite the fact that we all know it can't be done), we have to face the fact that some compromising, some haggling, some trading-off must be done, and that's where the real difficulty arises.

Mackintosh suggests that we go about this unpleasant task of haggling this way: first, determine what the respective airshed can take. The New Orleans, Louisiana Air Quality Control District, which he uses as a hypothetical example, decides, on the best possible scientific advice, that the air flow over that area can handle x tons of this, and y tons of that, and z tons of the other type of "emission"-dumping—and still be quite livable. Second: decide to how many users (and abusers) of the air you will apportion this total absorption capacity (and this, incidentally, includes you and your car and furnace). This gives so many "air rights" to pass out to users. Three: sell these rights at auction (with a certain minimum bidding price) and thereby assure that they go to those who have the most urgent (valuable) uses for the available absorptive capacity. Every year the auction would be repeated for another year's rights.

The end result of this ingenious scheme would be: (1) pollution would never be allowed to exceed a specified limit—there are just so many air rights and no more; (2) users of rights can decide for themselves whether and how to clean up and then sell some or all of their unneeded air rights to others; (3) clean-air-advocate groups could, conceivably, outbid other users of air rights and thereby get the air as clean (at the expense of other economic activities) as they please; (4) as further users of air come in, the price of air rights would rise ever higher, making clean-up devices just that much more attractive alternatives to continued dumping.

This is a desperately simplified and abbreviated account of the matter. Mackintosh shows that the problem is by no means new—he goes back to the London of 1661—and he also examines all the other difficulties—and promises!—associated with the idea.

Not exactly deck-chair reading on a drowsy summer afternoon, but fascinating for anyone who really wants to dig into this sticky or smelly mess.
